Finding Dory is a film about a forgetful Blue Tang which had been separated from her parents since childhood. It depicts (16) how Dory journeyed from the Pacific Ocean to a place where diverse ocean species were kept, in search of her parents.

While the adorable (17) Dory has captured the hearts of many in the movie, you may be keen to know some interesting facts about the Blue Tang. As the Blue Tang carries a toxin (18) in its flesh, you may fall sick if you accidentally ingest (19) one. Despite its name, the Blue Tang is not always blue. Its colour changes at night because of the way light is reflected off its skin. Unlike docile (20) Dory in the movie, it can cut you with its sharp spine that stands upright when provoked or threatened as a self-defence mechanism. Hence, the Blue Tang is also known as Surgeonfish.

The Tiong Bahru Estate

Tiong Bahru is a quaint estate which has much to offer as the heritage trail reveals. One can find many good eateries and diverse little shops. Tiong Bahru combines two words: 'Tiong' which means 'the end' in the Hokkien dialect and the Malay word 'bahru' which means 'new'.

The Singapore Improvement Trust developed Tiong Bahru as one of the first public housing programmes. The original intention was to ease overcrowding in Chinatown. While Tiong Bahru is a popular address presently, the original estate got off to a slow start.

A stroll around the estate will allow one to take in the sights and admire the unique architecture of the Tiong Bahru flats. They were based on a distinctive Art Deco style known as 'Streamline Moderne', designed to mimic certain features of cars, trains, ocean liners and aeroplanes of the pre-war days.

There is plenty of walking to do on the self-guided tours. Therefore, a better way to appreciate the heritage of the place is to explore part of the estate and stop for a meal before moving to the various sections on the heritage trail.

Did you know that the Tiong Bahru estate was once part of a sprawling Chinese cemetery?

Try visiting

- The Horseshoe Block - historically significant as it houses the first civilian air raid shelter in a public estate
- The Seng Poh Garden and the Dancing Girl sculpture - created by Lim Nang Seng who also sculpted the two Merlions at Merlion Park by the mouth of the Singapore River
- The Tiong Bahru Market and Food Centre – the highest concentration of old hawker stalls, vendors and coffee shops that have been in business in the Tiong Bahru area for over thirty years

Read the passage carefully and answer the questions that follow. (20 marks)

I was alone in the living room, making a list of groceries to buy. Two years after we got married, Keith was posted to Florida. I was not a suitable candidate for many jobs as I did not have a memory like an elephant. That seemed to be an important job requirement. Keith was always busy at work, working till late at night.

Winning Entry Selected. That was the Monday-morning headline. I was happy for that person as I imagined what I would do if I were the winner of A Thousand Words, a coveted writing contest which everyone in Florida looked forward to. A grand prize money of $10 000 and a paid trip for two to the esteemed, World of Writers Conference, held in London were just some of the many perks the winner would receive. I made a list of what I could buy with the prize money: a 65-inch flat screen television, a computer and the list went on. I wrote things down so I would not forget. "Writing helps you remember, Perry", my fifth grade teacher, Miss Elk, always advised me.

Author of Winning Entry Uncontactable. The Tuesday headline was still on the front page but higher. I read the article while I waited for Keith to finish his breakfast. The author of the winning entry had forgotten to include any contact details on the registration form.

Final Call For Anonymous Author. Wednesday's headline was right at the top, grabbing the attention of many readers. A paragraph of the winning entry was published in the hope that the author could be identified. I picked up Keith's coffee mug with my left hand and walked to the dishwasher with the newspaper in the other. I switched it on. The chug chug sound of the machine was like having company.

I began to miss my late grandmother, Gram, whom I lived with as a child. I missed those times when she used to read stories to me. She would read as if she were acting them out. I decided to make believe that Gram was reading to me. I cleared my throat and began to read parts of the winning entry.

As I read it, saliva flew out of my mouth. I read it again just to make sure. I was the winner! How could I have forgotten that I had taken part in the contest? I wanted to share the news with Keith but he did not answer my call. He rarely answered his phone during meetings. He would be thrilled if he knew that we were going to be very important people at the Conference in London.

I made my way to meet the organisers of the contest at their office. A young lady at the reception led me to a room where a group of staff was waiting for me. They seemed affable. "Mrs White, we will need you to answer a few questions. This is to make sure that you are the author of the winning entry," a male staff explained. I nodded my head. "So Mrs White, could you elaborate how the story ended?" the same staff probed.

"Oh Jane, the main character, forgave her brother for ... erm ... for..." My voice trailed off. I just could not remember. My mind was blank.

"Mrs White, you claim you are the author of the winning entry and yet you are unable to remember how the story ended?" another staff scoffed. Soon, sniggers filled the room. I knew what they were thinking I detested that. I wanted to yell at them in anger but my words were jumbled and thick in my throat.

A police officer appeared in the room. They did not give me time to recall. I had to call Keith. "A good memory is essential, Perry," I began to recall Miss Elk's words.
