Like many leaders, King Canute was surrounded by people who were always praising him. The king was a man of sense, and soon grew weary (16) of the constant flattery.

"Great King Canute, you are the greatest monarch of all," the people said with exaggerated enthusiasm (17). "Even the sea will obey your commands!"

"In that case, bring my chair to the edge of the sea," the king replied. He sat on the chair and surveyed the ocean before him. The tide was coming in (18). In a mighty voice, he commanded the tide to stop and retreat. Quietly, a little wave rushed up the sand and touched his toes. Then a second wave swept forward and curled around the royal chair. This continued until the king's feet were totally submerged (19).

"Well, my friends," King Canute said, "it seems that I am not all powerful (20) as you would have me believe." The people hung their heads in shame and walked away quietly.

The following is an excerpt from a short story, "My Grandmother and Me", written by local author, Josephine Tham. Many of her short stories are based on real-life experiences involving her and her grandmother whom she dearly loves.

When I put my fork and spoon down on the plate, I heard Grandma let out a loud sigh. "Why didn't you finish up all those grains of rice on your plate, Mei Mei? Do you want your future husband's face to be covered with pimples?" asked Grandma so earnestly that I tried my best not to burst out laughing. Turning to my parents for some help, I saw that they were equally amused, but definitely not coming to my rescue. Shaking my head, I quickly scraped the plate clean and made sure that I ate every bit of food left. From the corner of my eye, I saw Grandma nodding in approval, and could not help but smile.

Grandma had lots of old wives' tales which she often shared with me. Sometimes, I would cheekily try to convince her that they did not make sense, and always ended up getting a light smack on my palm. Getting my palm ready, I said, "Grandma, look at Mum's plate. There are grains of rice all over! Why doesn't Dad have a single pimple on his face?" On hearing that, my parents started laughing uncontrollably! Even my grandmother could not hide her grin. She sighed, again, and threw her hands up in the air, giving up on trying to impart wisdom to her mischievous grandchild.

In case you're wondering...
Old wives' tales are not based on facts and are usually untrue. They are often used to discourage unwanted behaviour, usually in children. So, have your grandparents used such stories to encourage you to be good?

Budget is another word for inexpensive. And, as the name suggests, budget airlines _____(51)_____ a cheaper way to fly. You might be wondering how two flights travelling the same distance can be of two different _____(52)_____. The answer is simple – budget airline companies trim a lot of the frills that people used to _____(53)_____ for granted when they fly. This cuts costs for the company, allowing it to charge a _____(54)_____ ticket price.

For example, regular airlines usually serve food and drinks on board. This is _____(55)_____ in the ticket price. Even if the passenger chooses not to eat the food, he still _____(56)_____ to pay for it. Budget airlines, on the other hand, do not include food in the ticket price. If passengers _____(57)_____ like something to eat, they would have to pay separately. This applies to their luggage _____(58)_____. If they want the budget airline to carry a bag for them, they will have to pay. Passengers who want to _____(59)_____ money can simply give up these frills. Budget airline companies try not to have either expensive offices _____(60)_____ travel agents sell tickets for them. _____(61)_____, they encourage passengers to buy their tickets directly via the internet or telephone. Budget airlines also fly to destinations that were ignored by regular carriers. In the Philippines and Indonesia, which are made of many small islands, cheap budget flights have

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

One fateful morning, the sound of rumbling thunder boomed across Mount Everest Base Camp. Esther and I looked across at one another in the team's communal dining tent. Sensing something amiss, we went out to take a look. It was not thunder. A huge mass of snow had slid off one side of the mountain, causing an avalanche! A cloud of snow formed where the avalanche had landed. The relaxed atmosphere at the camp became fraught with tension. The radio crackled continuously with talks of a rescue operation.

Two Austrian climbers and their local guide were making their way down to Base Camp when they were caught in the avalanche. The snow pushed them down the slope and they hit several rocks along the way. Luckily, they had their helmets on. The couple was later found by rescuers hanging upside down on a cliff, with only the rope between them holding them together. One of the Austrians later showed us his bruises, which were spread across his torso. He could not remember much as he had momentarily blacked out. The Austrians were lucky. Their local guide could not be found! Another Canadian climber and his local guide who were on their way to the summit, were spared when they hid behind an ice block which shielded them from the impact of the avalanche. The Canadian recalled how suffocated he felt when the snow whirled around him. He later pulled the plug on the climb and took a helicopter flight out early.

After witnessing the rescue operation and coming to know about the first death that climbing season, we became increasingly uneasy. We decided to split into two groups to avoid putting all our eggs in one basket. That afternoon, the leader of our group, whom we had engaged to climb Everest, told us something which I had no wish to hear. He said, "You ladies had better reconsider if you want to continue the climb later."

"But we are already here, fully prepared and raring to go!" I shot back. I was seething with anger. We had prepared for months for this climb.

But I began to question if climbing Everest was worthwhile. The time spent away from my family had taken a toll on me. I remembered how my father nearly died from dengue fever when I was away on another overseas climb. It was on my birthday when he was admitted to hospital. Thinking that he would not see me again, he was in tears as he sang me the birthday song over the phone. I sensed something was wrong. He was trying too hard to show that he was happy and I asked if everything was fine. It was only after I had returned from my trip that my mother revealed the details of the crisis. My father was hospitalized after 5 days of high fever and my brother had to scramble to source for blood donors. I was upset at not being there when my family needed me the most. I cared for my family deeply, yet I was not willing to give up achieving my goal of being in the first women's team from Singapore to climb Mount Everest. While it was natural to be afraid, I was not willing to let it discourage me.

"Let's do this!" I said. I took a deep breath and headed towards the summit with my teammates.
