Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

The trees in the woods formed a dark barrier. They rose above Ben, blocking the moon from view and hindering his progress. His snowshoes swished across the powdery surface, making his movement easier. Once or twice, he stumbled and almost fell. To add to his plight, despite having clothed himself sufficiently, the cold had slowly begun eating into his bones, causing him to shiver.

Suddenly, a chilling sound pierced the still night air and brought fear to his heart. He plodded on, wanting to reach the lake faster. Another howl confirmed his fears. It was the unmistakable cry of a timber wolf. Being pack animals, where there was one, there would be others. They must have picked up his scent in the clear night air and were starving. They sensed an easy meal but he was determined not to provide relief for another's appetite.

The next howl was much closer. Knocking into dead tree stumps and breaking off brittle old branches that reached out to block his path, Ben soldiered on– fear forcing him to move faster.

As the trees began to thin out, he started using his elbows to swing his body faster towards the approaching lake. He stripped off the snowshoes and prepared to skate over the frozen lake in his boots. His cabin lay on the other side of the lake and as he moved towards the white solid plain, he prayed, "God, please let me reach my cabin before the wolves reach me."

His gun hung from his shoulders, swaying with the skins of the animals he had shot earlier when light was plentiful. As he jumped down onto the frozen lake, he slipped and hit the ice with a crunch. His right elbow hurt terribly and his left hand hung limply from the wrist. Howling in agony, he struggled to his feet and began to cross the lake knowing very well that he couldn't use them to propel him forward. Wanting to stay alive was the only thing on his mind.

He heard the wolves landing on the lake behind him and this time, they were so close that he could hear their panting. In desperation, an idea flashed into his mind. Using his legs, he sped crazily forward, then suddenly stopped and veered to the left and then to the right for a few metres before continuing in a straight line. The zig-zag movement had managed to create some distance between him and the chasing pack. With renewed confidence, he sped on and managed to increase the distance. Soon, the once distant image of his cabin was now looming large in front of him – the sight of which brought a weak smile to his face despite the excruciating pain he was feeling.

Finally, he felt the crunch of snow beneath his boots. He stumbled onto land and up to his cabin. Breathless but nevertheless relieved, he threw the door open, stumbled in and closed it hard, just managing to escape from the flashing yellow fangs of the leading wolf. He sank to the floor while the hungry pursuers howled with disappointment outside in the cold. He thought that it truly was a close shave.
