Barbie is to receive a dramatic makeover in,2016, toy company Mattel has revealed. The new range will include three different body shapes – petite (16), tall and curvy. Marking a radical change from the unrealistic (17) proportions of previous models, the updated dolls are intended to better reflect the diversity of the product's audience.

Mattel is banking on this change, hoping that it will appeal to the shifting expectations of what Mattel called "millennial moms". Despite some minor variations, there has been insignificant (18) change in the size and shape of Barbie since the first doll launched in 1959. Consisting of (19) 33 different dolls, the new range is the brand's biggest-ever update.

Mattel will be hoping its new-look range reinvigorates (20) demand for Barbie, which has struggled against criticism of the doll's example for young girls. In recent years, dolls from the latest movies, such as Frozen's Snow Glow Elsa, have overtaken it in the toy charts.

On 5 January 1933, construction began on the Golden Gate Bridge. Following the Gold Rush boom that began _____(29)_____1849, speculators realised the land north of San Francisco Bay would increase in value due _____(30)_____ its accessibility to the city. Soon a plan was hatched to build a bridge that would span the Golden Gate that serves _____(31)_____ a connecting bridge between San Francisco Bay and Marin County.

Although the idea went back as far as 1869, the proposal took root nearly fifty years _____(32)_____. A former engineering student, James Wilkins, called _____(33)_____a suspension bridge with a centre span of about 900 metres to be built. That was nearly twice ____ ____(34)____ length of any bridge in existence. It was estimated to cost an astounding $100 million. Eventually, engineer and poet, Joseph Strauss, said he could build a pure suspension bridge within a practical range of $25-30 million with a main span of at least 1200 metres.

The construction plan still faced opposition from _____(35)_____ sources. By the time most of the obstacles _____(36)_____ cleared, the Great Depression of 1929 had begun, limiting financing options. Despite the challenges, construction of the bridge started _____(37)_____ 1933 to 1937. The Golden Gate Bridge officially opened on 27 May 1937, the longest bridge span in the world at the time. _____(38)_____its tall towers and famous red paint job, the bridge quickly became a famous American landmark. Today, it stands as a symbol of hard work and power of grit in San Francisco.

Section I : Comprehension (Open-ended) 20 marks

Read this passage carefully and answer the questions 71 to 80.

Long before I was a traveller, I went to Guatemala as a tourist. Along with my sister, I visited the stunning Lake Atitlan , stayed on a coffee plantation in the city of Antigua and visited the cryptic Tikal Mayan ruins. On our last day there, we hitched across the hilly country and arrived promptly at a tiny border outpost just as the sun was setting. Our plan was to catch the one dilapidated bus that left this forlorn and primitive crossing each night bound for Mexico. Fluent in Spanish, my sister asked the border guard where to catch the bus.

. Pointing to the steps outside, he hurriedly motioned us out and proceeded to close up for the night. It was 9 o'clock at night. The bus was due to leave in an hour. Since we had one hour to spare, I thought we might as well indulge in something to keep us occupied. I shared with my sister a story about my friend, John.

. Some time ago, John was on his dog sled, crossing the frozen Yukon Lake. Just then something shimmering caught his eye. There on the white frozen lake, he spotted a herd of baby white seals in their glossy fur coats, moving across the lake. Just as John was lost in the scenery around him, a terrible storm came up. He completely lost his way. Day after day, John begged Lady Luck to help him but there was only silence. He thought he was going to die until an Eskimo came. He showed him the way and saved him. In the end, John learnt that he did not need something imaginary such as Lady Luck to help him, but he could rely on the kindness of a person's heart in times of need.

· The whole time I was telling the story to my sister, a man with a brown hat paced nervously back and forth. "Excuse me," he called.

· Now, anyone who has ever travelled knows that the only logical response to a stranger who calls out to you is to totally ignore him. Failing which, you risk getting cheated by some scams. Hence, we did not respond. However, the man kept circling us, his voice becoming louder and more insistent as he called out to us. We looked around. There was no one else, except this big, agitated man who was upset with his inability to get our attention heading for us. He leaned in. We backed up. "Madams, my name is Tom and I mean you no harm," he said in broken English. "If you're waiting for the bus, you're in the wrong place. It leaves from the Mexican side of the border, about a kilometre from here " he added.

Jumping up, we grabbed our backpacks, thanking him as we ran. After running some distance, we spotted the bus pulling away from the bus stop. We summoned all our remaining strength and sprinted towards the bus, screaming at the top of our voices for the bus to stop. Just then, I tripped over and sustained a very bad bruise on my knee. By some miracle, Tom ran ahead of us and stopped the bus for us to get onto it. Settling into our seats for the ten-hour ride, my sister and I looked at each another and smiled. "He's our Eskimo," we said.

. In the next two decades, I would spend almost ten years of my life on the road. While I got to see the tourist sights of the world, it was the Eskimos I met along the way who turned me from a tourist to a traveller. For they were the people of all ages, religions, countries and cultures who taught me that the world is not nearly as scary a place as so many would have us believe.
