Section G: Comprehension (Short Response)

Read the passage carefully and answer questions 35 to 41. (8 marks)

The largest flower in the world can be found in the jungles of Asia. When you are hiking in the jungle, consider yourself lucky if you come across the flower known as the rafflesia.

The rafflesia is the largest flower on the planet. It could weigh as heavy as eleven kilograms. It is so huge that you will not miss it if you happen to come across one while hiking. The plant does not have any stems, leaves or roots. The whole flower depends on a group of vines to live.

Why do these plants have such large flowers? They grow very large for a reason. The large flowers help to attract insects far and wide. Besides being large, they also produce a bad smell to lure their prey. These insects can help the flowers to reproduce. They fly from flower to flower, dropping the pollen grains.

However, it is sad to say that the rafflesia may be lost before we even get a chance to get to know it. With more and more people living on our planet, more space is needed for housing. Many of the forests are disappearing rapidly. Trees are chopped down and the forests are cleared to build more houses. As more and more forests are cleared, the rafflesia will lose its home. As a result, it might become extinct.

Section H: Comprehension

Read the passage carefully and answer questions 42 to 48. (8 marks)

Jane was an orphan who had to be sent to live with her grandfather. As a result, her grandfather had to look for another place as his house was too small for the both of them.

On a cold and chilly morning, Jane and her grandfather finally arrived at the new house with all their belongings. When they entered the house, they saw that the walls were old and dirty. Jane walked a little further and she saw a door. She opened it and walked into the room. She saw an enormous fireplace. A bed lay in the middle of the room. Jane clapped with joy as her bed was in a beautiful shade of pink.

"My favourite colour!" Jane exclaimed excitedly. She smiled and muttered "thank you" to her grandfather.

"Your room must be near the fireplace or you will freeze," he replied. "You can come and see mine too."

Jane walked with her grandfather towards his bedroom. When they reached the door, Jane pushed it open and she gasped. There were beetles and lizards crawling all over the room.

"Grandfather, why don't you share my room instead?" Jane said.
