Nancy was coming down the staircase when a movement behind a cupboard caught her eye. Her heartbeat increased. She shone the light at the cupboard. She caught a glimpse of a scrap of white fabric. Someone was hiding in the cupboard!

Nancy turned as pale as a sheet and her hands began to tremble slightly. She wanted to flee up the staircase but she needed to stay to solve this mystery. Instead of running away, she demanded, "Who are you? Show yourself before I shout for help. I am sure the police will be able to hear me!"

"Hold it," a male voice echoed through the darkness. A man came out from the darkness. Nancy pointed her torch at him, so she could have a better look.

"Could he be a burglar?" Nancy thought, as she stared at him suspiciously.

Before Nancy could say anything, he introduced himself. "I am Joseph Mascelli, a mystery story writer. I have received a tip about the burglary. I thought that this juicy bit of information would improve my story. Could you lower the light? It is hurting my eyes."

Nancy lowered the torch. She did not believe what he had said as nobody could enter the premises without being spotted by the police. Not taking her eyes off him, she moved backwards in the direction of the exit.
