SECTION F: Comprehension

Comprehension 1 (10 marks)

Read the following passage carefully and answer questions 31 to 39.

Annie's biggest problem was her little sister, Jenny. Jenny always drew on her homework and snatched her toys. However, being the older sister, Annie always forgave her. Their mother comforted Annie by saying that Jenny would behave better in time to come.

One afternoon, Annie was carefully painting a portrait of herself for an Art competition in school. Jenny was busy playing with her toys, allowing Annie to work on her painting peacefully.

After making the final stroke, she stared at the finished portrait with a smile. She was satisfied with it. She certainly deserved a short break on the computer.

When Annie returned after her break, her jaw dropped. She was shocked to find Jenny making long and bold brush strokes on her portrait. There was also paint splattered all over the floor.

"Jenny!" shouted Annie. "What have you done? I will never forgive you for this!" At the sight of Jenny's wobbling lips and watery eyes, Annie felt guilty for her harsh words.

"I'm sorry, Annie. I promise not to touch your work again. I'll clean the mess too," Jenny apologised while sobbing.

"Okay. Just don't do this again," Annie gave in although she knew Jenny would do something similar again. She could not wait for Jenny to grow older.

Comprehension 2 (10 marks)

Read the following passage carefully and answer questions 40 to 47.

As I entered my house by the back door, I found Uncle Tan, the cook and Ah San, his helper in the kitchen. Although they hardly looked up when I walked by, I merrily greeted them with the joyous news - I was now the newly-elected president of my class. Their posture reminded me of my disgraceful behaviour at the birthday party two days ago. Uncle Tan waved me on impatiently. "Can't you see we've work to do?" he asked curtly.

Instantly, I climbed the stairs and went into my room. I took out my exercise book where the votes were tallied, enjoying the triumph of my victory earlier that morning. Head girl of Sheng Xin Primary School! Thinking of that, the problems I faced at home slid off my heart.

Suddenly, there was a knock on the door and Ah San entered at once.

"A crowd of your friends is downstairs in the living room. They are asking for you," she whispered politely.

"Is Niang home?" I blurted out.

"I'm afraid she is. So is your father."

"Tell my friends I'm not home. Please do it!" I begged her desperately.

"I tried but they know you're here. Everyone has brought a gift. They mean well."

I felt panic-stricken but had no choice but to follow Ah San to the living room. As I crept down the stairs, I could hear their giggles and screams resounding through the house.

They yelled excitedly as soon as they saw me. As a result, no one seemed to notice my tongue-tied silence. I shifted my eyes away from meeting anyone else's, afraid that my family's luxurious life was about to be exposed to my penniless classmates as Niang, my stepmother, called them.
