"Why, yes!" answered the troll. He used all his might and lifted the biggest boulder he could find. When he was done, he was so exhausted that he dozed off

Read this passage and answer questions 40 to 45.

Totto-chan was skipping happily during recess when the headmaster approached her.

"Oh, there you are," said the headmaster. "I've been meaning to ask you something. Where did you buy that ribbon?" He was pointing at the blue bow she wore on her head.

Totto-chan was delighted. She had been wearing the special bow for two days. It was part of her aunt's old school uniform. She explained that her aunt had cut it from the back of her uniform and given it to her when she said that it was pretty. It was a beautiful silk ribbon with roses and lilies. When tied, it made a bow as big as Totto-chan's head.

"Oh!" The headmaster looked disappointed "Yesterday, Miyo-chan said she wanted a ribbon just like yours. So I went to all the ribbon shops in town. But I was not lucky."

Miyo-Chan was the headmaster's daughter and Totto-chan's classmate.

The headmaster then asked politely if Totto-chan could stop wearing the ribbon in school because Miyo-chan would never stop pestering him for it.

Totto-chan did not expect that request. She loved her precious ribbon and felt like saying no. However, she agreed when she saw her headmaster's tired face. The thought of her beloved headmaster, searching high and low in all the ribbon shops, also made her feel sorry for him.

The next morning, when Totto-chan's mother entered Totto-chan's room, she found the ribbon tied around the neck of Totto-chan's favourite teddy bear. She wondered why her daughter had stopped wearing the ribbon that she was so excited about.
