All wallabies are marsupials or pouched mammals. Young wallabies are born tiny, helpless (16), and undeveloped. They immediately crawl into their mothers' pouches where they continue to develop (17) after birth—usually for a couple of months. Like their larger kangaroo cousins, young wallabies are called joeys. Even after a joey leaves the pouch, it often returns to jump in when danger approaches.

Wallabies are typically (18) small to medium-sized mammals, but the largest can reach 2 metres from head to tail. They have powerful hind legs that they use to bound (19) along at high speeds and jump great distances. When wallabies are threatened by predators, or when males battle each other, they may also use these legs to deliver lethal (20) kicks. Wallabies also have large and powerful tails that they use for balance when moving and to prop themselves up when in a sitting position.

Fill in each blank with a suitable word. (15 marks)

Yawning, like scratching an itch, is a reflex action. Very often, one does not need to consciously think and act in (51) _____ to produce a yawn. The sequence of yawning is the same for every one – opening the mouth, taking in a deep (52) _____ of air and then exhaling slowly. At this time, the eardrums stretch and the eyes may (53) _____ tight, causing them to water. Do you know that all vertebrates, from fish and birds (54) _____ wolves and horses, yawn too?

Why do people and animals yawn? In fact, no one knows for certain (55) _____ there are some who have tried to explain this phenomenon. One (56) _____ is that we yawn because we are tired, since yawning happens before (57) _____ after our sleep. It can also occur when we do boring things. In both situations, we do not breathe as deeply as we usually do and as a (58) _____ , our bodies take in less oxygen. Thus, yawning helps to bring more oxygen into the bloodstream (59) _____ carbon dioxide out of it. Another explanation is that yawning stretches the lungs and lung tissues and increases the heart rate, making us feel more awake.

Other than (60) _____ the needs of our body, yawning has been considered to be (61) _____ communication tool by some researchers. They believed that before humans communicated vocally, they might have used yawns to (62) _____ home a message. A man might yawn to show his alertness or aggression towards another.

(63) _____ it be a reflex action of the body or a communication tool, one thing that many people agree on is that yawning can be contagious. Have you ever experienced seeing your friend yawn and then find yourself do the same (64) _____ after? Are you also aware that even thinking about yawning can get you yawning? (65) _____ the way, how many times have you yawned while reading this passage? Most likely you do not keep track since a yawn occurs spontaneously and we do not take much notice of it.

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

At the Great Wall of China, in Beijing, a new sensation has arrived - a young boy named Chen Guang.

Guang, 14, has become an overnight star after a Singaporean visitor to the Great Wall posted a video on Facebook of him speaking in 10 different languages.

Guang is one of the many children who peddles souvenirs, such as fridge magnets and postcards, to tourists at the Great Wall. It is not uncommon for the children to have picked up a few key phrases of the languages of the most frequent visitors - from India, Korea and Europe. However, Guang has stepped up his game. He surprises the visitors with his abilities to converse in many foreign tongues.

When he was younger, Guang's parents sent him for private English classes. However, after his father lost his job, his parents could not afford the school fees after one year. His mostly self-taught skills are remarkable. He is able to rattle off counting one to ten in 16 different languages, including Tagalog, Japanese, Vietnamese, German and Tamil.

Whenever Guang meets Indian tourists, he will burst into an enthusiastic adaptation of a song by the famous Indian singer, Shankar, as he sells them mementos. For visitors of other nationalities, he uses the same strategy to sell them souvenirs.

The money he earns goes directly to his mother who uses it to meet the expenses of his family's daily needs. His mother, Li Na, said she could not believe it when she started to hear about her son's growing fame.

Downloaded from SingaKids.com

"Even though I am his mother, I didn't realise how intelligent my son is. I didn't know that he knew these languages and used them to sell souvenirs to support the family," she said after viewing the viral video. She commented that Guang is never one to complain about wearing old clothes, having to walk long distances to school or not having enough food to eat.

The recognition Guang has received is transforming the life of his family. They have been taken on expense-paid trips to make guest appearances on local television programmes in Shanghai. Now, his mother does not have to struggle to fulfil her children's dream of receiving a good education. She is grateful that Guang can finally return to school.

Guang is one of the rare lucky children to have received a sponsorship from a Chinese businessman to pursue his studies in a top school in Beijing. He hopes to achieve his aspiration as a tour guide so that he can explore and travel to new places. He also hopes that other children peddling souvenirs to tourists will be offered the same opportunity.

In some countries, children work to supplement family incomes. They do not attend schools as they are forced to beg or work in risky industries, such as making bricks or salt mining. Giving money to children at tourist sites or on the streets can make the situation worse. The more a child gets, the more likely he will be made to beg. Thus, depriving him of the chance to receive an education.

It is important to appreciate and be thankful for what you have in life – be it big or small.
