Huang Fu was a very rich farmer who was always unkind to his servant, Ah Hop. Every day, Ah Hop (16) worked like a horse on the farm but was paid very little.

One day, Huang Fu instructed Ah Hop, "Buy me a bottle of wine."

(17) Puzzled, Ah Hop asked, "Master, how can I buy you wine if I have no money?"

Huang Fu replied (18) disdainfully, "Anyone can buy wine with money. It takes real skill to buy wine without money."

Time passed and Ah Hop eventually returned. He handed the bottle to Huang Fu and murmured, "Enjoy the wine, please."

Staring at the bottle in dismay, Huang Fu complained, "There is no wine! How can I enjoy this?"

Ah Hop said (19) with a straight face, "Anyone can enjoy wine if there is some. It takes real skill to enjoy wine when there isn't any."

Huang Fu made a choking sound and was (20) unable to utter a word. After that incident, he never summoned Ah Hop to do ridiculous things for him ever again.

Here's some feedback from a visitor, Mr Alvin Tan, published in our annual newsletter about the 2018 garden festival.

I attended this garden festival last year and I was very impressed! I did not mind paying an entrance fee of $25 to visit the beautiful garden displays as well as the floral display in the Emerald Dome! I took many lovely photographs there! My favourite area was definitely the Marketplace, which had free access for members of the public. I really enjoyed myself watching the stage performances, shopping for gardening tools and relaxing at the food and beverage stalls.

The Westview Garden Festival is organised by the Waterside Gardens and is supported by the National Parks Board.

Read this passage and answer Questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

Deep within the forest lived tall and ancient trees protected by a tree spirit called Maru. One day, three men named Aki, Hans and Raz decided that they would earn some money by cutting down trees in the forest and selling the wood to the villagers. Initially, they agreed that they would only chop down one tree a month as that would provide enough wood for them to survive for an entire month. For every tree they chopped down, the three men planted two saplings that would one day grow into enormously tall trees. "This is how we keep the forest healthy and happy," Aki would say with a smile each time he planted a sapling in the earth. "And if we take care of the forest, then the forest will take care of us."

For many months, Aki and his friends were conscientious about preserving the forest. They only cut down one tree each month and they always made sure that they planted the saplings in order to show respect for the forest. However, things started to change when Aki's friends began to look at the trees in a different way. Hans asked, "Why are we only cutting down a single tree each month when we could be cutting down many more? We could make more money then!"

"Yes, we could earn ourselves a great deal of money if we cut down more trees," said Raz. Aki was very distressed to hear his friends talking in such a manner. However, Hans and Raz were not to be dissuaded and so they combined their savings and bought a big tractor and an electric saw. Just before sunrise, Hans and Raz set out into the forest with their new equipment and began cutting down one tree after another. One by one, the towering trunks fell to the ground.

As the forest was filled with the crashing sound of the falling trees, Aki's heart was filled with sadness. "What are you doing?" he asked sorrowfully. "We must not disrespect the forest in such a manner." His friends merely laughed and continued to fell more trees before loading them onto the tractor. Aki felt powerless. He was unable to stop his friends because they were blinded by greed. Kneeling down and bowing to the sky, Aki clasped his hands together to ask for forgiveness.

Unknown to the men, Maru had been watching their deed. He was raging with fury that his trees were being cut down in such a disrespectful way. He decided to teach Hans and Raz a lesson by using his magical powers. Both men suddenly felt an acute pain in their stomachs and nothing they did seemed to ease the pain. Despite their discomfort, they continued their evil work of lumbering the trees. Soon, a cold gust of wind blew across the trees, shaking them violently and a heavy rain began to fall.

"We must leave this place!" screamed Hans and Raz. "The forest has come alive and destroyed all our equipment!" The two friends ran out of the forest as fast as they could and never returned. Aki, on the other hand, was miraculously protected from the wind and rain.

"I will not leave the forest!" Aki cried out at the top of his lungs. "I will stay and plant new saplings to replace the trees that my greedy friends have chopped down!" As quickly as they started, the wind subsided and the rain came to an abrupt stop. Aki was grateful that the storm was over, and immediately, he set about doing his task.
