AN ANTI-CRIME MESSAGE FOR SCHOOLS

The number of shoplifting cases has been on the rise, with the number being consistently high for the past decade. In 2011, Mega Warehouse and Hypermarket shopping malls were reported to have the highest number of shoplifting cases.

These shopping malls are huge and attract large crowds daily, especially during the many sales they have throughout the year. As such, they are frequented by shoplifters. Some of the items sold in these malls include toiletries and health supplements which are also easy to conceal in clothing.

The Great Singapore Sale is expected to bring in a huge crowd like the previous year and sales staff will be busier than ever. This will be a perfect opportunity for shoplifters to strike. DON'T LET ANY CULPRITS GET AWAY!

We watch. We care. We report.

Tips on how to spot a shoplifter and what to do

Notice their appearance and behaviour

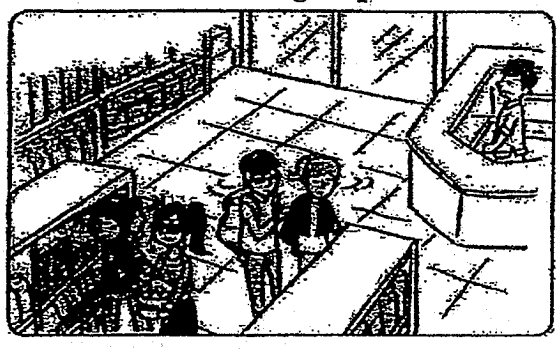

Don't be fooled by shoppers trying to look smart and stylish. Shoplifters may attempt to cover their identity by wearing hooded clothing and sunglasses. Hooded jackets might give the false impression that the shopper simply wants to keep warm.

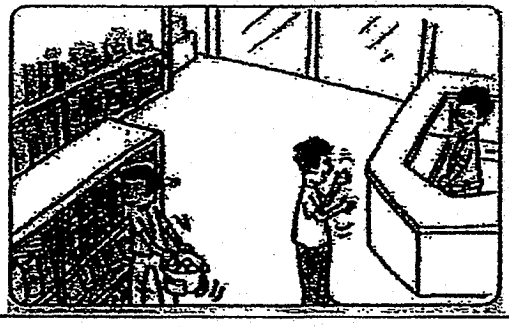

Most also loiter around their targets, thinking of the right move or waiting for the coast to be clear.

Beware of group theft

Group theft has become rather common. A group of 4 to 8 people may enter a shop separately, appearing to be independent customers, but work together to steal an item. Some even carry dangerous weapons like knives.

Watch out for distraction tactics

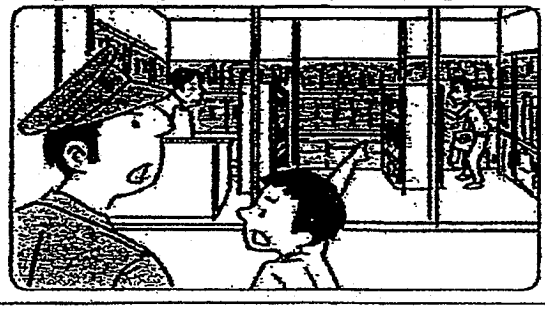

Other than group theft, shoplifters may work in pairs. One person works to keep the attention of the shop attendant away from the other. This makes it easier for them to steal without being spotted.

The person may ask many questions or simply block his line of sight so he cannot see the accomplice make his move.

Report anything or anyone suspicious

If you see someone acting suspiciously, don't take matters into your own hands. Instead, contact the mall security or better yet, call the police. It is better to be safe than sorry.

The Ministry of Manpower (MOM) has enforced new rules for employers of foreign domestic workers (FDWs). From 1 January 2019, employers (29)_____ no longer be allowed to safekeep money belonging to their maids, including paid salaries.

Current laws state that employers must pay their maids' salaries (30)_____ full and on time. With the new law emplaced, both employers and FDWs are protected (31)_____ money-related disputes. If employers are found guilty of keeping money belonging to their maids, they (32)_____ face a maximum penalty of a $10,000 fine and 12 months' jail.

Speaking on the sidelines of an event, Senior Parliament Secretary for Manpower, Ms Low Yen Ling, said that MOM received about 600 complaints 33)_____ year regarding maids' salary issues in the past three years. She added, "We understand that some FDWs, for various reasons, wish (34)_____ their employers to safekeep their monies and salaries but (35)_____ practices are strongly discouraged.

Employers can assist their FDWs by opening bank accounts for them. (36)_____ this, FDWs can manage their own monies from their salaries. This would minimise and prevent (37)_____ unnecessary salary disputes. (38)_____, MOM also added that this practice poses inconveniences and risks to both parties. Maids who have no direct access to their funds will have to approach their employers whenever they need their money.

Should a school hang on to a confiscated mobile phone for three months?

This issue has reached the courts after a parent felt that the penalty was too harsh. The parent is sued a secondary school principal for damages, but has not sucedded in getting the school to return the mobile phone.

(40)

(41)

The parent's request to have the mobile phone returned imediately was turned down by District Judge Clement Julien Tan. The judge ruled that the principal's action in holding on to it was justification, as the school rules had made it clear that any student caught using one during school hours will have it confiscated for at least three months. The boy met the principal on March 21 and admitted that he had used an iPhone 7 in school hours on March 8. It was confiscated and the SIM card was returned as with a receipt stating that it could be retreeved in three months' time.

(42)

(43)

(44) (45)

Later in the evening of March 21, the parent wrote to the principal to say that the mobile phone was his and he wanted it back. He added that "a three-month

I came home from work one day and my son greeted me at the door with a broad smile. "Dad, I am a hardworking man!" Puzzled, I asked my wife about this. She shared with me that (51) _____ five-year-old had emptied a 2-litre jug of water from the fridge, (52) _____ of it on the floor. My wife's initial reaction had been to yell and spank him. However, she did (53) _____. She patiently asked him, "Brenton, what were you trying to do?"

"I was trying to help you wash the dishes, mum," he replied proudly. (54) _____ enough, she saw a (55) _____ of plates that had been washed with the water from the fridge on the kitchen table.

"Well son, why did you use the water from the fridge?" she further inquired. Brenton explained that he could not (56) _____ the sink. My wife began to understand the situation better and her anger faded (57) _____ instantly. "What do you think you can do next time that would (58) _____ less of a mess?"

Brenton's face lit up as he replied, "I could wash (59) _____ in the bathroom." My wife explained to him that the dishes might break in the bathroom and he should instead (60) _____ her help. She then proceeded to clean (61) _____ the mess he had created.

As she finished narrating the incident to me, I realized (62) _____ important it is to make proactive choices. Had she gone ahead with her initial reaction, she would not have been able to understand what he was (63) _____ to do and would have missed a great teachable moment. (64) _____ both situations, she would have had to clean the mess, (65) _____ with this approach she was able to connect with him more effectively. More importantly, had she yelled and spanked him, he would have greeted me at the door with frown and said, "Dad, I am a bad boy!"

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 79. (20 marks)

Katie and I exited the Starbucks and joined the bustle in the street. The early morning crowd in the central business district was rushing to their places of work. Katie's usual toothy grin had been missing for some time, three weeks to be exact. In its place, were stiff lips and mildly furrowed brows. "Everyone in the office is desperate to win over Claude, you know," Katie muttered, audible enough for me to catch her words. Claude was the company's Director of Marketing, under whom we worked.

I continued to walk along the street with Katie deep in thought. I thought about Claude, remembering his typical short curt replies whenever we asked him anything. Since taking over as Director of Marketing less than three weeks ago, he had ordered a complete revamp of the company's plans and shortened deadlines. His motto seemed to be: more work in less time. He had no qualms about getting us to work past our usual hours, neither was he forgiving of those who could not match up to his expectations. Yet, everyone seemed to go out of the way to get his attention.

Katie should have been promoted so that she could have taken over when the former director resigned unexpectedly just over a month ago. At least that was what Mr Everett, the owner of the company, had her believe. Everyone in the office was rooting for her and that only added to her confusion and misery. However, her exemplary people skills and steadfast organisational ability lost out to Claude's qualification of being the sole heir to his father's empire. "A spoilt, entitled brat," I thought to myself, shaking my head.

Just then, we reached a traffic junction and I slowed down. As I stopped and took a sip of my cappuccino, I realised that Katie had not stopped. She stepped off the kerb and continued across the street, oblivious to the fact that she was crossing the busiest street of New York. "Katie, watch out!" I yelled. Katie stopped but it was too late.

A car came to a screeching halt. As I saw Katie falling to the ground, I made a dash for her. "Katie, are you all right?" I asked anxiously. She nodded as I helped her up. The driver of the car joined us both, his eyes wide and mouth agape.

"I actually slipped on the wet road while trying to step out of harm's way," Katie explained to the both of us. "Don't worry, I won't ask you to pay for my coffee," she joked to the driver. Her expression was now a complete 180-degree turn from just minutes ago. Her thick fur coat saved her from being injured. As I realised how lucky Katie was to be alive, a smile formed on my face. We continued to walk to our office building.

"You must be wondering why I'm smiling," Katie spoke. "This near-accident gave me an idea. Actually, it was when you came running across the road that the idea stuck me - how you were all worried and scared for me." I shot Katie a quizzical look. "The only way to get everyone back on my side, is to have another near-accident!'
