The story goes that a wolf once terrorised the people of a small town. It was a huge creature that killed and devoured (16) both livestock and people at will.

Francis heard of this and decided to resolve the problem. The wolf rushed towards Francis as soon as it saw him approaching its lair, but Francis stood his ground (17) before the fearsome animal. He commanded the wolf to stop terrorising the town, condemning it for its attacks especially on the people. Acknowledging (18) that the wolf had acted out of hunger, Francis promised that the people would provide it with food if it stopped its attacks on the town. The wolf placed its paw in Francis' hand in agreement.

Francis walked the now docile (19) wolf into the main square of the town. There, in front of everyone, Francis reiterated (20) his promise to the wolf which, again, placed its paw in his hand in agreement. Peace was restored.

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

The year was 1985. I had left Malaysia the year before to study at a junior college in Singapore. During my stay, I shared a rented room in a flat with my friend Jimmy. Every Sunday, Jimmy would be out gallivanting with his friends while I would be in the room quietly studying. But that was not to be on that fateful day.

It was the day before an examination. That morning, Jimmy was at home relaxing. He was playing his favourite songs on a CD player very loudly. I thought to myself how inconsiderate Jimmy was.

I asked Jimmy, "Do you mind turning down the volume?" He ignored my plea. Instead, he turned up the volume a little louder and at the same time began to hum the tunes to the song. I was enraged and began to read loudly from my textbook. But to my great frustration, he increased the volume and began singing loudly. Looking for a solution, I decided to go to the community library near my flat. I left the flat in a bad mood, and took the lift to the ground floor. While walking towards the bus stop, I passed by the famous Indian rojak stall at the coffee shop. It was not open for business yet as it was still early in the morning, but I could smell the aroma of the chilli gravy wafting from the boiling pot. I told myself I had to have the rojak for lunch later after my revision.

After a ten-minute bus ride, I alighted. At the entrance of the library, I reached into my pocket for my wallet, which carried my library card. But my wallet was not there. I searched my other pocket. It only had my house keys. I must have dropped it on the road on my way to the library! After that, I was unable to concentrate on my revision. I was very upset that my wallet was gone. It was something that I treasured, because it had been given to me by my father on my thirteenth birthday.

Later, while studying I suddenly felt itchy all over my body, especially my back and thighs. I found I had insect bites, shaped like twenty-cent coins, probably from the bugs in the armchair. No amount of scratching could alleviate my discomfort. The bites were also very painful and I tried to endure the pain and itchiness in silence. After a while, I could not take it anymore and decided to go home, hoping that Jimmy was out for lunch.

As I now did not have any money, I had to walk all the way home in the scorching midday sun. I was sweating profusely. Walking past the Indian rojak stall, I looked enviously at the long queue of customers. I was disheartened as I felt my empty pocket. When I reached home, Jimmy was still in our room listening to his songs.

I decided not to let what happened that day deter me from my goal in doing well for my examination the next day. I told myself, "Difficult roads sometimes lead to beautiful destinations". That night when Jimmy was fast asleep, I sat down to continue my revision again. I was exhausted but I managed to revise my work thoroughly. When I received my results later that month, I was pleased I had aced my examination.

Q80)	The writer could not study the day before the examination as Jimmy was playing his songs loudly in their room and ignored the writer's plea to turn down the volume. The writer then went to the library to study but realised he had lost his treasured wallet. Later, the writer got painful and itchy insect bites so he decided to walk back home under the scorching sun. He could not eat the Indian rojak he craved earlier on too. The writer could only start revising his work thoroughly at night when Jimmy was asleep. Despite all those troubles, he still aced his examination.
