(E) Comprehension

Read this passage and answer questions 13 to 19. (8 marks)

Uncle Podger was an annoying person. Whenever he took on a task in his house, he would turn the house upside down. Once, his wife, Aunt Mary wanted to hang a picture on the wall. When Uncle saw that, he immediately said, "Let me do it! I design buildings every day and this is child's play."

First, he sent his daughter, Alice, to get some nails. Before climbing onto the chair, he instructed his son, Tom, to get the hammer. While one person was holding the hammer, I was shining a light on the wall so that Uncle could make a mark for the nail.

By this time, Uncle, who was a little on the heavy side, was short of breath and having difficulty balancing himself on the chair.

"Hand me the hammer and picture," Uncle ordered. Tom handed him the hammer which Uncle promptly dropped on my foot and unjustly scolded me for no reason. As the picture was heavy, it slipped from his hand too. The glass came off as the frame hit the chair. Uncle managed to save the glass but cut himself.

After that, Uncle got down from the chair to look for his handkerchief to bandage his wound. We searched everywhere for it but to no avail. Uncle reprimanded us, "Doesn't anybody know where my handkerchief is?"

By ten o'clock that night, everyone was hungry and tired. The picture was finally on the wall, but crooked. When Uncle asked us if he had done a good job, we all agreed very quickly that he had.
