Section H: Comprehension [1] (10 marks)

Read the passage carefully and answer questions 31 to 39.

There are many strange creatures on land and in the sea that are still a mystery. Some of them seem to come from another time. They are rarely photographed or filmed but many people claim to have seen them.

One such creature is Nessie, the Loch Ness monster. It is the most famous lake monster in the world. Many people have reported seeing Nessie, starting from four hundred years ago in Loch Ness, Scotland. There were some false reports made by people who thought they saw Nessie but were mistaken. However, others have lied to become famous or make money. Many tourists come to Loch Ness to try and see Nessie, hoping to take photographs.

The first newspaper story about Nessie was in 1933. Mrs. Mackay was driving along the lake when she spotted something enormous moving in the water. A year later, Dr. Kenneth Wilson took one of the most famous black and white photographs of Nessie. There was no better photograph till 1977, when Doc Shiels took some colour photographs of the monster. Unfortunately, some of these photographs were lost or destroyed. This has often happened with other photographs of Nessie.

Many scientists agree that there is some kind of living thing in the lake. The unknown creature is humongous and has a long neck. However, till now, no one has proven it is a monster that lives in Loch Ness.

Section I: Comprehension [2] (10 marks)

Read the passage carefully and answer questions 40 to 46.

Long ago, in a small village, there lived a simple-minded woodcutter. Every day at daybreak, the woodcutter would head for the hills. Being hardworking, he would spend the entire day chopping wood to sell in the village. Needless to say, all the villagers liked buying wood from him and his small wood business thrived.

One day, as on all other days, the woodcutter made his way to the hills. It was not long before he chanced upon a big olive tree at the edge of the river. The woodcutter's eyes lit up. He knew the wood from that tree would be of excellent quality and fetch a good price. At once, he climbed onto the tree, sat on one of the branches and began chopping.

Along came a priest from a nearby village. Seeing the woodcutter in that precarious position, the priest started waving his arms and shouting frantically to him, "Stop! You should not be chopping wood like that!" The woodcutter calmly replied, "Dear sir, this is the only way to chop wood. See, you take the axe and chop at the branch." The priest warned, "If you sit on the very same branch you persist in chopping, you will fall and die!" However, the woodcutter merely smiled and continued chopping. Shaking his head, the priest walked off.

After some time, the branch did indeed break. As the woodcutter lay on the ground, he recalled the priest's words. "The priest predicted that I would fall and I did! Since he was right about that, I must surely be dead. After all, he said that I would die," thought the woodcutter. "Dead people do not move. Therefore, I must lie very still," he muttered to himself.
