Have you ever seen a photograph of a steak, salad or slice of strawberry shortcake that made your mouth water? Images like these are the creations of skilled food photographers with an eye for details. These artists (16) get their creative juices flowing to make their audience crave a dish without the help of the food's actual presence, taste, aroma and texture. Food photographers work to create and (17) capture these beautiful and enticing images of food for magazines, menus, cookbooks and other types of media. They must have (18) very good knowledge and experience in using a digital camera and related technologies.

They work with food stylists to make the food look as (19) appetising and appealing as possible. There are approximately 1,000 photographers employed in Singapore. Only a small percentage of these professionals specialise in food photography. Such jobs are (20) typically freelance-based and highly competitive. Some photographers join the International Association of Culinary Professionals - Food Photographer and Stylist Division in hopes of landing more jobs.

Each of the underlined words contains either a spelling or grammatical error. Write the correct word in each of the boxes. (12 marks)

One of the most practical ways of getting important tasks done is by doing them a little at a time. Create the timetable by setting aside the same time each day or blocking out specific periods in your daily schedule to complete a task or a piece of work.

(39) [ ]

(40) [ ]

The key is to be consitant and slowly foster a habit. Once this happens, you will get used to doing it and a part of the task will be acompleashed each day. Let's use writing a book as an example. At first it will seem like an overwelming task. But if you set your goal to writing one page a day, even if you take a break during the weekends, you will have complete a 260-page book at the end of the year. We can also compare

(41) [ ]

(42) [ ]

(43) [ ]

(44) [ ] (45) [ ]

this technik to building a brick house. The individual bricks can be small and lay them

Downloaded from SingaKids.com

one at a time can be painfully slow. However, when those bricks are constantly placed on top of each other, a strong wall or pillar is created. Therefore, unless we plan our time well, it not only helps us to get more work done but also developing self-discipline.

(46) [ ]

(47) [ ]

(48) [ ]

This ultimately helps us to overcome our habit of procratinasion.

Successful time management is the result of hard work done daily through the affactive use of time. If you are achieving your daily goals, you are living productive.

(49) [ ] (50) [ ]

Such daily achievements are the building blocks of a successful life.

Thousands of edible water bottles were handed out at the 2019 London Marathon in an attempt to reduce plastic waste.

Runners generally prefer plastic water bottles (51)_____ paper cups of water as they are more convenient to drink from when running. Therefore, at the (52)_____ of a marathon, a sea of plastic waste is usually found as thirsty runners attempt to stay hydrated (53)_____ drinking from, then discarding, bottles of water as they run.

However, this time, (54)_____ of the event had arranged for all runners to be handed edible pods filled with a sports drink as they (55)_____ along the gruelling 42-km route while trying to clock the fastest time.

These 'Ooho!' pods, designed by a London-based company, were made using a common ingredient (56)_____ many may be familiar with – seaweed. The pods could be bitten to release the liquid inside and the outer covering could also be swallowed. However, if runners (57)_____ not to swallow the outer covering, they could throw (58)_____ on the ground. This was perfectly fine as the pods were designed to break apart within four to six weeks – a relatively short time period. In (59)_____, it would take 450 years for plastic bottles to disintegrate.

"The marathon is just a stepping stone. We are hoping that the 'Ooho!' pods can be used (60)_____ a much larger scale in the future (61)_____ as during music festivals," said Rodrigo Gonzalez, one of the company's founders.

(62)_____ these efforts, the 2019 marathon was still not entirely plastic-free (63)_____ water bottles were available in shops along the route.

With the goal of reducing unnecessary plastic waste, the main sponsors of the event had also guaranteed that all water bottles (64)_____ out during the marathon would be made partly from recycled plastic. In addition, all these plastic bottles that the runners had used would be (65)_____ up and recycled.

All in all, this 'Ooho!' pod campaign had helped to reduce the use of hundreds of thousands of plastic bottles.

Read this passage and answer questions 71 – 81.

The river was dry. Clara could not remember the last time water had flowed along it. It had not rained for a long time and the tanks were almost dry. She would have to order water in again and that cost money, something she did not have a lot of. How much longer could they hang on? Ever since her brother, Scott, decided he wanted nothing more to do with the farm and left, she had been struggling. Her parents were too old for farm work and it was difficult to hire help. People were leaving the countryside as jobs in the city paid more. Clara had no solution.

The following week, Clara drove to a town to run some errands. On the way back, she saw a sign on the side of the road advertising a bed and breakfast. She knew that was the answer. She had read many stories about people living in the city wanting a countryside experience. Her family could offer accommodation and meals at their farm at a reasonable price. "Maybe I can also charge an additional fee if guests are keen to experience farming activities," she wondered. Now all she had to do was to convince her parents.

"No," Dad objected. "This is a working farm, not a farm stay for people who can't differentiate a horse from a cow."

"Considering we don't have any cows on the farm, that shouldn't be a problem," Clara said. "I really don't think we have a choice, Dad. Half the sheep are dead and the ones left aren't that far behind. If we get paying guests, we can buy more feed and get more water brought in."

"But it won't feel like a home with strangers around the house," Dad said.

"Yes, it will. This will still be our house and the rooms you built will still be here," Clara assured him.

"If we don't do this, John, we may not be able to keep this place running for much longer," Anna, Clara's mum said.

"And it will only be during the weekends," Clara pleaded.

John nodded. "Just one condition – if the guests mess up my farm, this will have to stop immediately."

Hence, the three of them prepared the house for guests. Clara got all the approvals and placed the first advertisement. The day the advertisement appeared, they received three reservations. Then, Clara began worrying about their decision. What if the guests were unreasonable and demanding and the food was not good enough? Clara had prepared as much as she could. She just hoped the first guests would be nice.

Soon, the first group of guests from the city arrived. They had never stayed in a farm house before. All it took was for a kangaroo to hop across the paddock in front of the house to make their weekend unforgettable. The guests were captivated by the animal and went home happy.

The next guests were a different story. Nothing was good enough. The scenery was not beautiful enough. They did not see enough animals. The bed was too hard. The meal portions were not enough and they had no interest in seeing how the farm worked. However in the end, they still paid their money and that was what Clara needed.

By the end of the third month, the bank balance was starting to look better – not good enough that they could stop worrying but a lot better than it was. Clara's dad was more comfortable with what they were doing. The minute things started to improve, Scott returned. He wanted everything for nothing. Clara was furious but her dad was thrilled to have him home.

"You know what he's like," Mum said. "Scott can do no wrong in his eyes."

After lazing around the farm for a few months, Scott finally decided to go back to the city to work. That morning when he left, Clara was in high spirits. It was not until her bank card was rejected because of insufficient funds when buying food for their next guests that she discovered Scott's incorrigible act. She recalled that Scott had access to the farm account and her parents would never take money out without telling her. All their hard work was for nothing.

"He is not welcome in this house ever again," Dad said in a disheartened manner.

Thankfully, their business picked up with the help of the guests they had accommodated in the first few months. Word-of-mouth brought them more business than any of their advertisements. It took them a year before they could stop worrying about the farm.
