Testimonial by eight-year-old Luke about the Singapore Museum:

I used to think museums are old and boring. My opinion changed after I visited the Singapore Museum. I felt like an adventurous explorer, discovering new and interesting things about the past.

My favourite gallery is Life in Singapore, where I saw historical figures and listened to their stories from audio recordings. I even got to smell spices like cardamom and saffron. My mom signed me up for the workshops which were so fun!

I really look forward to another outing to the museum again!

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

Radin and his mother lived in a rundown hut. Next to it was a well where Radin's mother washed the clothes of people who lived in the bungalows. "Radin, run along. I know you want to lighten my load but you'll be late for school," Radin's mother would say. However, Radin would take a look at her blistered fingers, then continue to fill the pails with water from the well after sweeping the floor. After finishing the chores, Radin would then walk to school with his neighbours, Kassim and Mulan.

One day, Mulan asked Radin to catch her a small fish that she could rear in a small aquarium. Radin ran back home for his fishing net and met Kassim at a nearby stream.

They stayed in the stream for a long time without any success as the fishing net was full of large holes. Frustrated, Radin threw away his fishing net and used a different technique to catch a fish.

After a short while, Radin managed to scoop up a wriggling black fish with his hands. He dropped the fish into a small jar full of water and both of them looked at the fish in amazement.

"What a beautiful and rare fighting fish! Let's keep it," Radin said.

"What about your promise to Mulan?" asked Kassim.

Radin hesitated and answered, "Let's worry about that later." Then, they went home.

That evening, Mulan went to Radin's house hurriedly, eager to know if he had caught a fish for her. Radin lied that he was too busy helping his mother. Mulan left, thinking, "I'll be patient. Radin will surely get me one when he's free."

After Mulan left, Radin went behind the house and saw Kassim looking at the fighting fish which he had transferred into a glass jar.

"Are you really going to keep this fish? You're supposed to give it to Mulan," Kassim said, feeling uneasy.

"I can always catch Mulan another fish," Radin said to Kassim. "We can sell this rare fish for a lot of money." Deep in his heart, he knew that the money would definitely help to supplement his mother's meagre earnings.

Radin's mother, who had been in the kitchen all the time where she could hear them, came storming out. Sensing trouble, Kassim left quickly.

"You bad boy!" she yelled. "Take this fish straight to Mulan's house and tell her the truth!"

Radin was ashamed of himself. He picked up the jar and hurried away with tears in his eyes.

When he saw Mulan, he confessed that he had done something wrong. He explained what had happened and apologised.

Mulan exclaimed, "This beautiful fish will look perfect in my aquarium!" She grasped the jar. Then, Mulan grew quiet for a while and suggested, "I think you need this fish more than me. Why don't you keep this fish and catch me a few guppies tomorrow?"

Radin's eyes grew wide in disbelief. "You're my true friend indeed. I'll catch you plenty of colourful guppies!" Radin gushed. Mulan laughed and handed the jar to Radin.
