Wildlife Reserves Singapore (WRS) shared some good news recently. They made known (16) that a pair of tiger cubs were born last year. This is the first successful birth of the near-extinct (17) animal at WRS since 1988. It calls for a celebration as it was not an easy feat to achieve.

A total of 400 babies across 107 species were born or hatched in wildlife parks managed by WRS last year. Among these, 29 species are labelled (18) as "threatened" under an international conservation organisation.

The birth of the twin tiger cubs is an outstanding result in conservation breeding. This was possible (19) because the animal care team placed an emphasis (20) on providing the best possible care for the animals. Currently, their mother, Intan, is caring for the twin cubs in an off-exhibit area.
