Imagine having everything you need - community centres, supermarkets, parks - just a few steps from home. It could make you healthier and build stronger bonds (16) between you and your neighbours. This is the idea behind the 15-minute city. Here, people can get all the services they need within 15 minutes of home, on foot or by bike. This urban (17) model is being developed in cities around the world.

Carlos Moreno has been a champion (18) of 15-minute cities for years. Inspired by the need to fight climate change, he proposed to build more pavements and bicycle lanes to drastically (19) reduce carbon emissions. As housing costs increase, he is also worried about people being displaced (20). As such, he is focused on inclusion and wants to create places that people of all backgrounds can call home

Read this passage and answer the questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

On 13 May, exhausted and struggling to breathe, Lisa staggered into Camp 3. At 7162 metres, it was higher than she had ever climbed. However, the expedition was not going according to plan as she was struggling to scale Mount Everest. It had been her dream but it was slipping away quickly. Helping Lisa with her oxygen mask was the group's leader, Kami.

"I always try to make sure every client reaches the summit," says Kami. "But there is a line. The moment I realise that any of my clients will not make it, I will abort the mission. Even from the outset, he saw that Lisa was struggling. Days earlier, she took 19 hours, twice the expected time, to trek from Base Camp to Camp 2. When Lisa finally arrived, Kami made the decision that she was not ready for the summit and had her flown back down.

Rejoining the group a few days later, things started well. However, by 6000 metres, Lisa was already heavily reliant on supplementary oxygen, a resource normally reserved for altitudes of 7000 metres end above. By the time they arrived at Camp 3, Kami had made up his mind. The risk was too great and he ordered her to be taken back down the mountain to safety. Kami says, “There is always a risk of avalanche and above Camp 3, the path Is steep and treacherous." He strongly believes that descent is always the best decision so that everyone is safe.

Towering 8850 metres above sea level, Mount Everest is the highest mountain in the world. Located on the Nepal-Tibet border, this global beacon of exploration lures hundreds of climbers every year. The death toll has been-the highest in four years. Overcrowding, bad weather and a record number of permits being issued may all be contributing factors. Kami also believes it is an increase in the number of less experienced climbers that Is making the problem worse. He blames some tour companies for not educating the risks of climbing Mount Everest to novice climbers.

Many veteran climbers have also warned novice climbers with little or no training of the risk of attempting to scale huge peaks such as Everest. These climbers need to understand that climbing Everest is extremely risky. They need to stop believing just because they will be rescued if they get in trouble just because they are with a 'Sherpa guide'. Even the strongest Sherpa cannot lower an incapacitated person by themselves or expect extra oxygen to be delivered to 8400 metres at a moment's notice.

Any expedition to climb Mount Everest must be accompanied by a Sherpa. Mostly young men, Sherpa guides are not just the muscle behind any expedition, they are also expert navigators. Enduring freezing temperatures, they help climbers to negotiate icefalls, avalanches and extreme altitude. From Camp 4 up to the summit, climbers will enter what is commonly known as the “death zone”. Operating above 8,000 metres, climbers might develop altitude sickness. Relying on supplementary oxygen carried in bottles, climbers most also conserve enough oxygen supply for the return journey. "I keep checking everyone's oxygen levels, and in the event of extreme weather, I make strategic decisions about whether we should ascend or descend to avoid any developing situations in the mountains,' explains Kami.

Working as a mountain guide since 1992, last month Kami broke his own world record of successful ascents not just once, but twice. When asked about his achievements, Kami said humbly, "I treat every climb with the same sincerity as the first. Whenever a client is successful, it makes my day. I believe breaking records Is just a by-product."
