Fee: $60 (adult and child above 10), $30 (child aged 10 and below)

Here's what you can look forward to!

Visit local fruit farms which grow over 20 different types of fruits. Learn about unique farming techniques and get a chance to sample some seasonal produce like durians and longans. Fresh fruit juice will also be served!

Savour the flavour of traditional dishes prepared with local ingredients. You probably will not be able to find them anywhere else! All meals and refreshments for the day will be provided, so come with a good appetite!

Visit the pretty villages scattered throughout the town, each with its own distinctive character. While you do some sightseeing and shopping, your knowledgeable tour guide will acquaint you with their rich history.

- Be well-taken care of by an experienced and knowledgeable tour guide and an approachable bus driver.
- Travel in a clean and comfortable air-conditioned tour bus.

What a participant said about a previous Harvest Town Day Tour:

"My husband and I took our parents and three children on this tour. The bus driver, Mr Koh, and the tour guide, Bridget, made us feel very safe, comfortable and relaxed throughout the trip! Bridget knew a lot about all the places we visited! At first, I was afraid that my children would not be able to take in all the information. However, Bridget was so engaging that all of us thoroughly enjoyed listening to her commentaries! The meals were excellent and all of us had fun trying all the different types of fruits we had never even seen before! We had a great time!"

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

For years, Seng had trained tirelessly, so as to excel in bowling. Now in Tokyo, Japan for their maiden Olympic experience, he and his teammates were enjoying the fruits of their labour. They were representing Singapore in bowling at this prestigious sports event. Seng's dream had finally come true. With heads held high, they were making their way to the Olympic stadium to join the athletes from all over the world for the opening ceremony.

Seng and the other bowlers were in high spirits. Everything was perfect – well, almost everything. Seng's eyes nearly popped out when he saw that the sleeve of his jacket had been torn. It was the red and white jacket with the Olympic logo at the back, worn by every Singapore Olympic athlete. He realised he must have torn it while trying to yank the jacket off the clothes hanger in his rush to get to the stadium. "I can't do anything about it now," he thought, as he broke out in cold sweat.

His teammate, Kamal, giggled. How could he laugh at his plight? "Stop it, Kamal!" said Seng, feeling agitated. "I don't think anyone will notice."

"They'll notice it," said Kamal. "The spectators will notice things like that."

Seng thought about what Kamal said. Worried about that, he let out a sigh, feeling stressed.

Suddenly, a teenaged Japanese girl came up to Seng and pointed at his jacket. She started speaking but he could not understand her. Then, she tugged at his jacket sleeve, near where the tear was.

"What do you want?" Seng asked curiously, even though he knew it was pointless to ask her. Suddenly, she started taking off her own coat. Then she looked up at him.

"She wants you to take off your jacket for her to try on!" Kamal said.

Seng hesitated for a moment but decided to take the risk and handed the jacket to the girl. He did not think that would cause much delay and he would still be able to make it for the opening ceremony in time. She took it and bowed. He bowed slightly too. However, when he raised his head again, he saw her running off with his jacket!

"Thief! She's..." Kamal shouted, "...stealing it!" Seng ran a few steps after her before he stopped. In a flash, she had disappeared along the crowded street, much to Seng's dismay. It would be a tall order to get the jacket back, even if Seng was a sprinter.

"What do I do now? " Seng asked sorrowfully.

"You'll just have to go as you are," Kamal replied, dragging him along.

Twenty minutes later, they were standing with the other athletes, as the ceremony was about to start. "First, the tear. Then, the thief. What rotten luck!" Seng thought. Then, he felt a tugging, this time on his shirt sleeve. He looked down. It was the Japanese girl, holding a neatly-folded item. "You thief! You can't escape now!" Kamal burst out, as he gripped her by the arm. Seng took the jacket from her – and he immediately understood. The long rip in the sleeve was gone. It had been sewn so perfectly that he could not even see the thread. He had to hold it up close to see the stitches. Kamal was looking at the girl with his mouth open. She smiled at them and bowed again. Seng bowed a very deep bow to her this time.

The music began and the ceremony started. Thousands of athletes marched together. Moving with the same rhythm and the same joy, all were determined to be the best that he or she could be. There was an extra marcher in the ceremony on that proud day - a beaming Japanese girl. Having tugged at the heartstrings of the Singapore Olympic team, especially Seng, she had been invited to march with them.
