It comes as no surprise that exercise is good for your health. Experts have long cited studies that give insight into (16) why exercise works. Furthermore, recent research has shown that there are positive (17) changes that happen to your body before, during and after a workout. Undue (18) stress can lead to inflammation, which is the body's painful response to injury and overuse. Simple mind-body exercises can reduce (19) inflammation. Such exercises help our bodies fight off poor health. "Even just 15 minutes a day of practising mind-body exercises will bear fruit," states a researcher at Conventry University, England.

Exercise also helps your brain, not just your body. Physical activity helps brain cells grow and moving more appears to lower the chances (20) of memory loss. In addition, through exercise, people are better able to cope with anger and feel happier.

Toy-Making Competition 2021

ARE YOU READY FOR THE BIG CHALLENGE?

Singapore's biggest toy-making competition is back!

Get ready to use your creativity in making fascinating toys to showcase your talent at this annual event!

How to participate

- Find a friend to form a team of two or take part as an individual.
- There are two categories in the competition. Remember to register for the correct category!

Junior Category (open to Primary 1 to 3 pupils only)

Participants have to:

- include the use of bottle caps as part of the toy.
- submit at least one photograph of you/your team creating the toy.

Senior Category (open to Primary 4 to 6 pupils only)

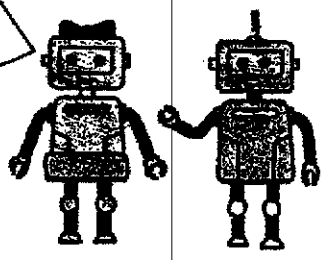

Participants have to:

- submit a toy that creatively demonstrates scientific concepts.
- provide a journal that contains details and photographs of the toy-making process.

PLEASE TAKE NOTE

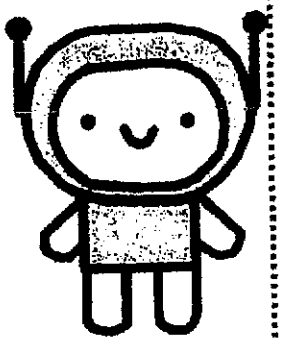

Only 10 individuals/teams from each category will be shortlisted to compete in the finals. Shortlisted participants will be informed by post and email only.

Participants must abide by the rules and regulations of the contest. All decisions of the judges will be final.

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

Mariam was born and brought up in Singapore. Following the vision of our government that every Singaporean family should own a house, she worked hard and bought a Housing Development Board flat in Jurong West. She had worked as a part-time household helper in my house for the last sixteen years. She always wrapped the same worn-out scarf around her head and dressed in a long kurta* with full-length sleeves and long trousers.

A sixty-year-old single parent, Mariam had worked hard all her life to educate and raise her three children. She was extremely frugal with her own expenses as she had a meagre income. Every day, she had coffee and two slices of plain bread for breakfast and ate nothing else till evening. Having realised that, I started giving her a fruit every day. Noticing her worn-out scarf, I decided to buy her three new scarves. Choked with emotions, she thanked me gratefully, "Madam, I don't deserve your kindness."

She was also one of those who simply did not know how to say 'no'. Though thrifty, Mariam never refused any request for help from her friends or relatives. Each time, she would give money to those who asked her for help without expecting anything in return. Her heart of generosity never ceased to amaze me.

When she started working for me, Mariam promised me fervently, "Madam, I will take care of your house like my own. Don't worry at all."

She had fulfilled her promise. Every weekday, she would arrive punctually at 9 a.m. and finish all her chores meticulously by noon. These regular mundane tasks included house cleaning, laundry and ironing. It was to her credit that my whole house was spotlessly clean. No visitor ever failed to notice this and to mention this fact. I had complete trust in Mariam. She had been given a set of keys to my whole house since she joined us.

It so happened that one day, I could not locate my favourite bracelet. Instinctively, I suspected that Mariam might have taken it and told my husband about the suspicion. He disagreed.

A few days later, I discovered that she had found the missing bracelet under my dressing table and returned it to me. Thankfully, I had not confronted Mariam about the bracelet. I was truly ashamed of my small-mindedness and reflected on my own behaviour and thoughts.

"Why do I assume that poor people like Mariam are not to be trusted? That they are likely to be thieves? It is so biased of me," I concluded. Since then, I resolved to never pre-judge anyone without solid evidence.

Mariam's moral integrity was once again demonstrated when she returned fifty dollars from the weekly salary I had paid her. I was absolutely shocked. I could not believe it. She needed every dollar to feed her and her family, but she was very clear. If she did not come for work on a public holiday, she would refuse to receive payment for that day.

(Go on to the next page)

Downloaded from SingaKids.com

That happened a few times and each time I would insist, "Please take the full amount, Mariam, I want you to have it."

Her quick reply would always be the same, "One must always be honest. I did not come for work on the public holiday, so I cannot take money for that day."

Mariam's attitude towards wealth and money was an inspiration to me. Her example was truly uplifting and heart-warming.
