Read the following passage. Answer questions 13 to16.

A rich lady asked an artist to paint a picture of her. A few days later, the artist delivered the finished painting to her house but she was not at home, so he left it with the servant. The next day, the same servant returned the painting to the artist. The rich lady had rejected the painting! Her pet dog could not recognise her in the painting and kept barking at it.

The artist stared at the painting. Then, on the lady's cheeks, he began to spread some peanut butter.

"Please ask your Madam to visit me at the studio," the artist told the servant.

When the rich lady arrived with her dog, the artist carried her pet and walked towards the painting. Instead of barking, the dog started licking it excitedly.

"Look! Your dog does recognise you. You must pay me for my hard work," said the artist. The rich lady was speechless. She paid him, took the painting and left hurriedly with her dog.
