Jack met Carl who had just ended his basketball practice. They were walking home when they heard a strange noise coming from the bushes. "Did you hear something?" asked Carl and he stopped walking.

"I didn't hear anything, it's just your imagination!" Jack retorted. The truth was that Jack did hear something. He did not want to admit it. Jack had always been timid. He knew that Carl would insist they check the source of the sound.

"Hey, I'm sure you heard it too," Carl insisted. Just then, they heard the strange sound again. Jack's heart skipped a beat. Curious, Carl walked furtively towards the bushes. Jack had no choice but to follow him reluctantly.

"It's a kitten!" Carl exclaimed excitedly when he saw what was in the bushes. He reached out to touch it gently but was pulled back by Jack.

"It won't hurt me. Don't be afraid," Carl spoke in an assuring tone and walked towards Jack. He then held Jack's hand and the two brothers bent down slowly to stroke the kitten's head together. The kitten purred softly and licked their hands.

"Look! It has an address on its collar. Let's return this kitten to its rightful owner," Carl suggested. Jack then nodded his head in agreement and was proud that they had done a good deed.
