Ring! The alarm clock went off, waking Julia up. She got out of bed to brush her teeth. "Mother!" Julia called out as she walked into the kitchen. She could not find her mother. Then, Julia remembered that it was a Saturday and her mother would be at the supermarket shopping for groceries.

Feeling hungry, Julia decided to cook some noodles. As she put the noodles into a pot of boiling water, the telephone rang. She raced out of the kitchen to answer it. It was her classmate, Jane. Jane told Julia about the new book she was reading. The girls chatted happily.

Suddenly, Julia smelled something burning. "My noodles!" she shouted. She quickly said goodbye to Jane and hung up. She had forgotten about her cooking. She dashed into the kitchen and smelt the burnt noodles. There was no more water in the pot. Julia immediately turned off the stove.

Just then, her mother came home. As soon as she smelled burnt food, she rushed into the kitchen. When she realised what had happened, she was very angry with Julia for leaving her pot unattended. Julia apologised profusely to her mother and promised to be careful next time.

Alan wore very thick glasses. Jack, his classmate, liked to tease him about his glasses. Alan would avoid Jack every time he saw him. He wished that Jack would not pick on him.

One day, their Science teacher, Mr Tan, walked into the classroom and announced that there would be a quiz the following week. After school, many of them gathered in groups to revise for the quiz at the library. As Alan studied with his friends, he noticed Jack sitting alone. Jack was staring at his notes, looking very worried. Alan could see that he was having trouble preparing for the quiz. No one wanted to help him.

Alan thought hard about whether he should help Jack. Should I help him? Should I let him suffer alone since he has always been nasty to me? At that moment, Alan remembered his teacher, Miss Joy, telling the class to help those in need even if they were unkind to them. Alan made up his mind to help Jack. He plucked up his courage and walked to Jack. "Shall we study together?" Alan asked.

Surprised by Alan's offer, Jack nodded gratefully. With Alan's help, he revised for the quiz and did well. After that day, Jack stopped picking on Alan. He apologised for his bad behaviour. They became good friends.
