Section C (8m)

Comprehension

Read the passage below and answer questions 17 to 23 based on the passage.

It was six in the morning. I was crouching in the tall grass in the dark, metres away from a hideout belonging to Singapore's famous Bishan otters. As a reporter for the local newspaper, I was there to take photographs of the otters and then write an article about them. For the past half an hour, the area had been quiet. The silence was interrupted only by the call of a bird and joggers.

The otter family was still asleep but would be up any minute now. Soon, I spotted the first otter. Then, I heard high-pitched squeaks as more otters awoke. They swam along the river, catching fish. One otter tried to snatch a fish from another. Others engaged in playfighting. Meanwhile, an older otter taught the younger ones how to fish. When some otters got tired of treading water while chomping down fish, they carried the food to the riverbank to eat. The otters rested till late afternoon and fished again in the river before dark.

Although otters are native to Singapore, they were not seen much before the 1990s. There are now ten otter families and they occupy mangroves, coasts, reservoirs, rivers and canals. The increase in the number of otters is due to the abundance of clean water and fish along our waterways.

Comprehension Open

Read the passage below and answer questions 36 to 40.

When I was ten years old, Mother found a dog by the roadside that had been hit by a car. She immediately took him to a vet as one of his back legs was badly injured. His leg took some time to heal. Since Mother could not find the dog's owner, we kept him and named him Chip. Chip and Mother were inseparable. He was Mother's shadow and followed her everywhere. Whenever she left the house, he would whine pitifully.

One day, on our way to my grandparents' house for dinner, Mother stopped at a minimart. "Mary, let's buy some fruits for Grandma and Grandpa and a snack for Chip," Mother told me as she got out of the car. I tagged along to seize the opportunity buy an ice cream for myself. Soon, we were on the road again.

Half an hour passed when Mother asked suddenly, "Where's Chip?" Chip was a quiet dog, so nobody realised that he was not in the backseat. None of us remembered seeing him get out of the car at the minimart.

It was dark by then and raining very heavily. Worried sick, Mother decided to drive back to the minimart. When she stopped in front of the store, she gasped. There sat Chip, soaking wet, with water dripping off his long ears. Mother rushed out of the car and practically flew towards our pet.

"What a faithful dog you have!" the minimart owner exclaimed when she saw us hugging and patting Chip. "He must have been waiting for you to return and has not moved from this spot despite the rain."

That night, Mother rewarded Chip with as many treats as he could eat. "I'm so glad that you are safe and sound!" she said cheerfully.
