Comprehension (20 marks)
Read the passage below and answer questions 1 to 10.

"I will race you to the corner, Ellen!" Annemarie adjusted the thick leather bag on her back so that her schoolbooks balanced evenly. "Ready?" She looked at her best friend. Ellen made a face.

"No," Ellen said, laughing. "You know I can't beat you – my legs aren't as long, and look what I have here" she said, shifting her own bag of heavy books against her shoulders.

"We have to practise for the athletic meet on Friday – I know I'm going to win the girls' race this week. I was second last week, but I've been practising every day. Come on, Ellen. Help me win it," Annemarie pleaded.

Ellen hesitated, then nodded. "All right, just for you. Ready," she said.

"Go!" shouted Annemarie, and the two girls were off, racing along the sidewalk.

"Wait for me!" wailed little Kristi, left behind, but the two older girls were not listening. Annemarie laughed as she sped past Ellen along the street. She outdistanced her friend quickly.

"Stop!" a soldier carrying a bayonet ordered in a stern voice. Behind her, Ellen also slowed and stopped a few feet away. Far back, little Kristi was plodding along, her face in a pout as the girls had not waited for her. Annemarie looked up. There were two of them. Nervously, she looked at the face of the soldier who had ordered her to halt and to the bayonets they were both carrying.

"Why are you running?" the harsh voice asked. His language was very poor. Three years, Annemarie thought with contempt. Three years they have been in our country, and still, they can't speak our language.

"I was racing with my friend," she said politely. "We have races at school every Friday, and I want to do well, so I – " her voice trailed away, the sentence unfinished. Don't talk so much, she told herself. Just answer them and hope they will go away. She glanced back hesitantly. Nearby, a woman had come to the doorway of a shop and was watching silently. Ellen was trying to hold on to Kristi who was glowering at the men. Kristi broke off the restraint and walked towards them. Ellen remained motionless behind. The taller one looked irritated and turned towards Annemarie. She trembled.

"What is in here?" he asked loudly. Annemarie saw the woman move quietly back into the shadows of the doorway out of sight.

"School books," she answered truthfully.

"Are you a good student?" the soldier asked. He seemed to be sneering.

"Yes"

"And who is this?" he asked, looking to Annemarie's side. Kristi had appeared there suddenly, scowling at everyone. "My little sister." The soldier reached down and stroked her little sister's short, tangled curls. Stand still, Kristi, Annemarie ordered silently, praying hard that she would receive the message. However, Kristi reached up and pushed the hand away.

"Don't!" she said loudly. Both soldiers began to laugh.

"She is pretty, like my own little girl," the tall one said in a more pleasant voice. "Go home, all of you, and don't run." The two soldiers turned away. Quickly, Annemarie grabbed her sister's hand. In a moment, Ellen was beside her. They walked hurriedly towards the large apartment building where both families lived.
