Any Norwegian man given the name Odin, has large boots to fill. Some men and women show true grit by enduring hardships that would break most people. Some show (16) it by conquering fear. Some show it by pushing themselves to do things that appear (17) impossible to ordinary mortals.

Odin Heyerdahl did all of these. However, he did something else, too. It did not involve pain, endurance or survival. In fact, it was relatively (18) simple. And yet, in its own way, it was so gusty that most of us, if we are honest with (19) ourselves, would find it almost ridiculously difficult. By the time you have read the story of Odin and his remarkable expeditions (20) at sea, I think you will understand what I am talking about.

CHANGI COMMUNITY CLUB
VISIT TO GREEN ARK FISH FARM

WHAT Green Ark is one of the first closed containment fish farms in the world. It is a floating structure about the size of two classrooms.

WHERE Located 5km off Changi Point, the farm can produce 166, 000 kilograms of fish a year. The fish are housed in four gigantic tanks. The fish reared include barramundi, red snapper and grouper. They are mainly for local consumption.

HOW The fish swim in isolation and are safe from threats such as oil spills and plankton blooms which could kill them. The sea water they live in is filtered. Bacteria and viruses are destroyed by ozonation. In this process, oxygen is pumped into the tanks every hour.

> "All these improved conditions ensure that the water quality remains high. This enables our fish to thrive."
>
> Mrs Linda Tan, spokesperson of Green Ark Fish Farm

Would you like a glimpse of Green Ark Fish Farm?

For the very first time, Changi Community Club is organising 5 small-group tours (25 persons each) to Green Ark Fish Farm on the following Saturdays: 5, 12, 19, 26 November. You will have first-hand knowledge of how fish is reared there. The highlight of the tour will be a tasty meal of fresh fish chosen by the chefs of Changi Cafe.

FISHY TALES

Here is some interesting information on three kinds of fish reared at Green Ark Fish Farm:

Barramundi

Also known as the Asian Seabass, it has a firm texture. Almost all barramundi are born male. They turn into females when they are 3 to 4 years old. A large female can produce more than 32 million eggs in a season!

Red Snapper

It has red eyes and is rosy-red all over. A female spawns over 20 times a year. A large fish can produce over 2 million eggs per spawn. People like it for its fine texture and sweet flavour.

Grouper

One common species eaten in Singapore is the Coral Grouper. The flesh is delicate and it is usually eaten steamed. Groupers first function as females and later transform into males.

Whip up your best dish using fish as your main ingredient. Attractive prizes to be won!

Refer to the passage below when you answer questions 71 to 80 in Booklet B. (20 marks)

I have never thought of myself as an adventurous traveller. Many of my earlier travels involved relaxing by the poolside or walking along a shopping street. I was not one for hiking – usually, the only thing that can get me to embark on a trek is the fear of missing out. Out of all the adventurous trips I have been on, almost each and every one of them were undertaken as I did not want to miss out. As they say, "Live Life to the fullest and don't miss out on anything!".

On my first trip to Georgia, every traveller I met spoke about a particular hike in the Greater Caucasus mountains that I absolutely could not miss. I knew instantly that this hike is one which I must try out. Almost immediately, I set about making arrangements for it. I remembered counting down the days to when I would set off for my adventure.

The hike involved a trek from Kazbegi town to Gergeti Trinity Church. Although it is a short trek, I knew it was not going to be an easy hike for me because the church's location is atop a mountain. Moreover, after six weeks of travelling around and living off khachapuri, the country's famous "cheese pie", I was not in the best of condition for such an arduous climb. I arrived in Kazbegi on a cold, foggy afternoon and reluctantly woke up early the next day with the idea to hike to the church. Luckily, a chance encounter over the breakfast table at my guesthouse saved me.

I met Tim and Mary by chance and got around to chatting with them. They had just completed the hike the previous day and gave me a crucial tip: Do not follow the main trail; instead, take the path on the left side of the mountain. I made sure to bear that in mind when I started my own hike.

As it turned out, the main route – the trail that almost everyone else was taking – was impossibly steep. It was also hard to manoeuvre around, and it would have definitely worn me out before I could complete the journey. However, the lesser-walked path that was recommended by the couple I had met the day before turned out to be a gentle, ambling trail along a mountain stream. Beautiful scenery and an easier hike? I would take that any day!

Had I tried to take the main path, I never would have finished the walk. Following this gentler route, I experienced something totally foreign: A hike I actually enjoyed! I felt so accomplished by the time I reached the church, all thanks to that chance encounter! For the rest of that particular holiday, I managed to go on more treks around the scenic countryside of Georgia.

I have since moved to Georgia and have challenged myself on many other hikes in the Greater Caucasus. If it were not for that first introduction to trekking in Georgia, I do not think I would have had the courage to attempt any other trails. I would have probably been like the many safe tourists who travel the world for hotel pools or shopping streets.

"Adventure" means something different to everyone, but I think there's an adventurous traveller inside all of us. Often it takes one positive experience to prove to yourself what you're really made of. Go out there today and challenge yourself. You will never know what is going to happen unless you step out of your comfort zone!

During the end of the 1996-1997 regular season, I had an opportunity to go watch a Chicago Bulls practice. They (29) _____ pursuing their second straight NBA Championship and had set (30) _____ NBA record with 72 wins the previous season. As excited as I was to be there, I was worried I would be disappointed because I assumed I would not get to see Michael Jordan practise. After (31) _____, the Bulls just played four games in five nights and I assumed Jordan would take a well-deserved day (32) _____. Especially since they won all four of those games and he had scored more (33) _____ 30 points, and had played over 40 minutes in each game.

Much to my surprise, Jordan showed (34) _____ 45 minutes before practice. He began with some warm-ups and then quickly moved to a variety of shooting drills. He got up to around 200 shots. He was focussed and intense, and was drenched in perspiration (35) _____ the time the rest of the team arrived.

Sensing his team needed a light day, the coach told the team that practice was only going to consist (36) _____ a short game to 20 points. Jordan played a part (37) _____ scoring twelve of his team's points and assisted in three others. He dove for loose balls and even took a charge! Needless to say, his team won easily.

On a day when Michael Jordan deserved to take a break and rest, he still outworked everyone and gave his all. His commitment (38) _____ excellence and his competitive fire never stopped. Michael Jordan was not great by accident.

Singaporeans are consuming too much salt and plans are in place to get people to cut their sodium intake by about 15 per cent over the next five years. To do so, the Health Promotion Board (HPB) will urge Singaporeans to (51)_____ their regular salt with lower-sodium alternatives, which are considered healthier. It will work with retailers to make (52) _____ substitutes more affordable.

The diet of Singaporeans has (53)_____ higher in salt over the years. The amount is well above the World Health Organisation's recommended daily salt intake (54) _____not more than 2,000mg or about one teaspoon. Studies have found that excessive sodium consumption results (55) _____ high blood pressure which can lead to heart attacks and strokes.

(56) _____ , these salt substitutes are about 10 times more expensive than regular salt. For a start, a (57) _____ affordable lower-sodium salt product will go on sale at major supermarket chains from October.

Singapore's latest war on salt follows its war on sugar, which aims to (58) _____ Singaporeans to reduce their sugar intake. The authorities have introduced a Nutri-Grade rating for drinks ranging from A to D, with a D grade (59) _____ the unhealthiest.

A recent local study found that a small reduction in sodium intake significantly (60)_____ health, even for those with normal blood pressure. Sodium plays an essential (61) _____ in regulating blood pressure but only a small amount - about 500mg a day - is needed for vital functions. This is (62) _____ to just a quarter teaspoon of salt.

HPB needs to get more supermarkets onboard to (63)_____ affordable lower-sodium salts to food operators. These operators can then (64)_____to healthier alternatives in their cooking, eventually (65) _____consumers. This move is critical as excessive sodium consumption can eventually lead to the rupturing of blood vessels or formation of blood clots, resulting in a heart attack or stroke
