A Day Out at the City Farm

Come join us for a day of fun and learn about the importance of growing our own food. Buy some organic produce or bring back your own mini garden to start your urban farming journey!

Date: 23 October 2022 (Sunday)
Time: 8.00 a.m. to 5.00 p.m.
Venue: City Farm

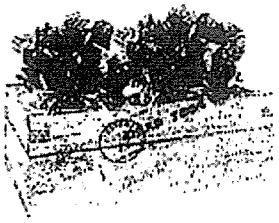

Fruit and Vegetable Sale

Get your organic produce from our garden!

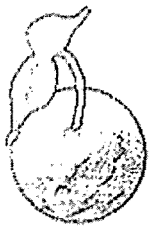

WORKSHOPS

My Miniature Garden
10 a.m. and 1 p.m.
Tickets: $15 per person (payment at booth)

Learn to make an easy herb or vegetable garden in a recycled box. Bring it home and be excited as you watch your plants sprout. Cook a meal after harvesting them.

How To Make A Seed Ball
11 a.m. and 2 p.m.
Free entry (first come, first served)

Each seed ball is made by wrapping seeds with compost and clay. They provide nutrients for seeds to germinate and act as a carrier to disperse the seeds. They also prevent the seeds from being eaten by birds and animals. Our seed balls are wrapped in craft paper and make great gifts for your family and friends.

Guided Tour 9 a.m. or 3 p.m.
Free registration (registration ends 5 minutes before tour starts)

Our friendly guide will share interesting facts about some common local plants and their uses. You will have an opportunity to touch, smell and taste some of the vegetables and fruits. Our guide will also highlight some farming methods that are environmentally friendly.

Downloaded from SingaKids.com

Excerpt from Nature Magazine, published on 5 May.

Have you ever wondered where your vegetables come from?

Singapore imports most of our produce from all over the world. This is because Singapore does not have enough land for farming. To ensure Singapore is able to produce its own food, the Government is encouraging urban farming.

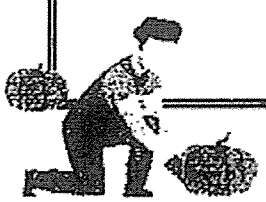

In fact, in recent years, urban farming has become increasingly popular as people are more concerned about the source of their vegetables and fruits. They are worried about the amount of pesticides used. More people are growing edible plants in urban spaces, such as balconies and HDB corridors, without the use of pesticides.

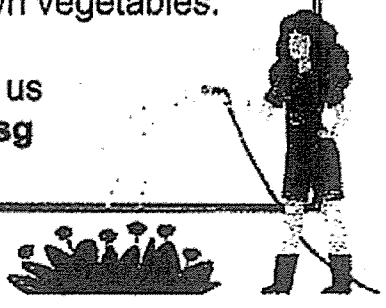

Located at Kranji, City Farm is one of the more established urban farms in Singapore. On weekends, they offer farm tours and workshops for parents and children to get in touch with nature and learn about the importance of growing their own vegetables. They also help design and build edible gardens for residential and commercial uses so that more Singaporeans can enjoy their own fresh produce. In addition, they conduct school visits to educate students on urban farming.

Student Ambassadors needed!

Do you have a passion for gardening? Volunteer with us and help promote urban farming to your schoolmates!
City Farm visits schools to give educational talks, teach students how to grow vegetables and build gardens together with them. We will train student ambassadors to guide other students in the correct techniques for growing their own vegetables.

Interested students are to drop us an email at joinus@cityfarm.sg

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80. [20 marks]

A car stopped outside and Ian, my little brother, rushed to the window for his first glimpse of a grandmother he and I had only heard about. "She's here! She's here!" he shouted excitedly. Grandmother had finally arrived, leaving Hong Kong to come live with us in San Francisco.

"I'm not helpless," she insisted when Dad hurried to help her out.

Ian was relieved. "She speaks English," he said.

Grandmother was a small woman in a padded silk jacket and black slacks. Her hair was pulled back into a bun behind her head. On her very tiny feet she wore a pair of quilted cotton slippers shaped like boots, with furred tops that hid her ankles.

"What's wrong with her feet?" I whispered to Mom.

"They've always been that way. And don't mention it, Stacy," she said. "She's sensitive about them."

I was instantly curious. Mom's forehead furrowed as if she was not sure how to explain this painful custom. "There was a time back in China when people thought women's feet had to be shaped a certain way to look beautiful. When a girl was about five, her mother would gradually bend her toes under the sole of her foot and bind them with silk ribbons."

"There's nothing lovely about those feet." Just thinking about it made my own feet ache.

As Grandmother reached the porch, Mom bowed formally. "I'm so glad you're here," she said.

Mother had coached us on a proper Chinese greeting for the last two months and watched anxiously as we executed our bows and greeted Grandmother. I thought Grandmother also deserved an American-style bear hug and took a step forward. However, when I tried to put my arms around her and kiss her, she stiffened in surprise. "Nice children don't drool on people," she snapped at me.

Switching her gaze to Ian, Grandmother's face brightened. "He has your eyes," she said to Mom, "and he's your pride and joy!"

In the following weeks, Mom started laying down all sorts of new rules. I was disgruntled as I had already given up my room. Whenever Grandmother needed to rest, we could not run around or make noise. Then we could not watch our favourite television shows because Grandmother could not understand them. Worst of all, Ian got all of her attention and her candy and anything else she could bribe him with.

It was the last straw one warm Sunday afternoon a month after she had arrived. I had just returned home from a long walk and I was looking forward to something cool and sweet, when I found her giving Ian an ice cream bar I had bought for myself.

Downloaded from SingaKids.com

When I complained to Mom about how Grandmother was spoiling Ian, she only sighed. "He's a boy, Stacy. Back in China, boys are everything." I nearly flew off the handle at those words.

It was not until I saw Grandmother and Ian together the next day. Finally, it dawned on me why she treated him so much better. She was sitting on a kitchen chair with her head bent next to his. She had taught Ian enough Chinese so that they could hold short, simple conversations. With their faces so close, I could see how much alike they were.

Ian and I both have the same brown eyes, but his hair is black, while mine is brown, like Dad's. In fact, everything about Ian looks more Chinese. Except for the shape of my eyes, I look as Caucasian as Dad. And yet people sometimes stare at me as if I were a freak. I've always told myself it is because they are ignorant and never learned manners. It was really hard to have my own grandmother make me feel that way.

Ever since Grandmother had arrived, I had been practising my ballet privately in the room I now shared with Ian. I slipped one of the shoes onto my foot, but when I tried to tie the ribbons around my ankles, the ribbons came off in my hands. Grandmother was sitting in the big recliner in the living room. My first instinct was to avoid Grandmother but I squared my shoulders. Uneasily, I approached her.

"Paw-paw," I said, "can you help me?"

Grandmother gave a start when she turned around and saw the ribbons dangling from my hand. Then she looked down at my bare feet, which were callused from the three years of daily ballet lessons. When she looked back at the satin ribbons, it was with a hate and disgust that I had never seen before.

"Give those to me." She held out her hand.

I clutched the ribbons tightly against my stomach.

"They'll ruin your feet." She lunged toward me and tried to snatch them away.
