Read the passage carefully and annotate. Answer the following questions in complete sentences.

The log walls of their neighbours' house were burned down to the ground. Everything that had been inside was gone except for a few metal pots sticking out of the ashes.

"I'm so glad the Jennings finally agreed to leave. They're safe now," their mother said. "I'd been persuading them to. There have been too many forest fires."

"Mum, will our house be like theirs?" Hunter asked, his lip quivering. Before she could reply, their conversation was interrupted by Brody's sudden barking. They did not realise that he had been digging a hole near the well and was trying to make it bigger. Jasmine ran over and grabbed him by the collar. He fought and broke free.

"Brody!" she exclaimed. She was about to grab him again when they heard something. It was soft, sort of like the wind blowing – no, it was like crying. Was it coming from the hole? She could not tell just by listening to the sound in the air. She dropped to her knees and pressed her ears on the ground.

"Is it coming from the well?" Hunter asked. Jasmine shook her head and replied, "It's coming from the hole Brody was digging."

The hole was not very large. The siblings looked at each other and Jasmine broke the silence. "What if it's their cat, Kitty?" She started to reach into the hole but it was too narrow and deep for her to feel anything.

Jasmine pictured the Jennings' orange cat down in the hole. Her heart sank at the thought. The sound came again. It sounded like a cry for help.
