One morning, during recess, John was at the library. He looked rather worried. David, who happened to be nearby, saw John. He knew John often spent recess all by himself doing his homework. He wondered if John had not submitted his homework yet again. Out of concern, David approached John.

"I have a lot of things to do at home besides my homework. Do not be mistaken. I have not been watching television or playing video games at home," John replied.

David then found out from John that he had to take care of his younger brother, Samuel, who studied in a kindergarten near their house. He also had to do household chores as his parents had to work till late at night. David felt sorry for him. As David was good at solving Mathematics problems, he decided to help John with his homework. David went to John's house after school on Tuesdays and Thursdays. John did his homework while David looked after Samuel.

John was grateful that David had helped him. He was able to submit his homework punctually. From then on, the boys became good friends. They studied together after school every day.
