Tim pushed back his sailor's cap and gazed at the sea. The Mermaid was rocking gently on the water.

"Let's hope we get some mackerel today," his father said. "Your mum can cook them for dinner tonight."

Tim loved grilled mackerel. They had a great catch the last time they were out in the sea. He swallowed his saliva as he recalled the scrumptious meal he had last week.

Tim let the line out carefully until he felt the hook touch the bottom. Then, after a while, he reeled it in slowly. His father fished silently beside him. An hour later, all that they had to show for their efforts was seaweed. By then, the sky had faded into a shade of crimson red. The water gleamed in the last rays of the dying sun.

"It is getting late," Tim mumbled to himself as he let out a long sigh. He was struggling to keep his eyes open. Just as Tim was about to take a break, he felt a hard tug on his line. He thought he was imagining things when suddenly, he saw the line dip deeper into the water.

Instinctively, he reeled it in quickly. He had caught a mackerel! Tim's father reached over to help him get the wriggling fish off the hook. The Mermaid then gave a violent lurch and they fell hard onto the deck.

It was pouring heavily. Mabel was drenched by the time she arrived at the sheltered walkway. From a distance, she watched the public bus leave the bus stop without her. She shook her head and sighed, "I should have brought my umbrella."

Mabel stood at the shelter and watched people board the buses. The only way she could reach school would be to have someone shelter her to the bus stop and wait for the next bus. The school was just one bus stop away. However, she was not confident of anyone helping her at all. Everyone looked too busy to notice her.

After asking a few passers-by for help, Mabel began to feel discouraged. She was shocked that no one had agreed to help her. Resigned to fate, she decided to wait for the rain to stop.

Suddenly, someone tapped Mabel on her shoulder. It was a tall and beautiful lady. She had recognised Mabel's school uniform and offered to shelter her to school. Mabel smiled and agreed readily.

When Mabel finally sat down in class, she took off her wet socks and dried them in class. Even though she was drenched, she was still glad that the lady had helped her.
