Whales are often mistaken to be fish, which are cold-blooded animals that can change their body temperature according to their environment. However, whales are actually warm-blooded mammals with a thick layer of fat under their skin called blubber that helps to (7) maintane a body temperature around 37 degrees celsius(°C). Whales give birth to their young alive and nourish them with milk. Whale calves are fed with milk and protected by their parents for at least a year. Some whales have two blowholes while others have one. The breathing process (8) involved removing air from their lungs through the blowholes before forming an upward pout of air and water. This is 9) forlowed by taking in fresh air into the lungs. Whales also have blubber to (10) helps whales float in water.

Do you know that whale blubber is also used to make candles, soap, and lubricating oil?

Section F: Comprehension (Selected Response) (5 marks)

Read the passage carefully and answer the questions that follow.

Two years ago, Father brought Blackie home from a fishing trip in the mountains. It was full of cuts and so thin that its ribs could be clearly seen.

"Can we keep him, please?" John begged his parents. Father hesitated. He warned John that Blackie would grow to be a big dog and require a lot of care. Besides, it was in such a bad condition that it might not be able to survive. John persisted and promised to take full responsibility for Blackie before his parents agreed to his request. He kept to his word and ensured that Blackie had clean food, water and medicine daily.

Over the months, Blackie became a big, strong dog and was John's best companion. Every weekday afternoon, Blackie would wait for John at the playground until he returned home from school. One day, John was playing a new game on his mobile phone and was not paying attention as he did his usual walk. Suddenly, he heard a loud screeching of brakes. To his horror, he turned around only to see Blackie sailing through the air before it laid motionlessly on the road.

When John's parents rushed to the accident scene, John was wailing with remorse. "It is all my fault. Blackie thought the car was going to hit me as I was not looking and the car was coming from behind me," John explained.

Father consoled him saying that it was a gesture of love from Blackie. John was there when Blackie needed help and Blackie was there when it thought John needed it. Fortunately, Blackie was not badly injured and John learnt to be more careful in future.
