Section G: Comprehension Cloze (4 x 1 mark)

Read the following passage carefully. Fill in each blank with the most suitable word.

We can spot wildlife in parks and forests. It is always exciting to catch a glimpse of otters, squirrels and even monkeys. However, there will be Singaporeans who are not so mindful when they interact (29) _____ wildlife. Some feed these animals while (30) _____ threaten them by throwing stones at them. They may think it is harmless to do so but they are wrong.

Human food is unhealthy for wild animals as they have specialised diets. Wild animals can become sick or die if they eat the wrong food. As they cannot distinguish food from wrappers, they can choke on them. Feeding animals may change their natural behaviour of searching for food. (31) _____, they are likely to approach humans and expect to be fed.

Throwing stones at wild animals may not only hurt them but also cause them to attack. People should (32) _____ do so as it may make these animals think we are going to harm them.

If we want wildlife to thrive amongst us, we must respect wildlife.

Section H: Comprehension [1] (8 marks)

Read the passage carefully and answer questions 33 to 40.

People use dance to tell stories, celebrate important occasions and pass on traditions.

One such dance is the lion dance. It originated in China and dates back 5000 years. The performers, dressed in lion costumes, copy a lion's movements to bring good luck. Lion dance is not only performed during Chinese New Year but also on other important occasions such as opening ceremonies. It is also performed to welcome guests-of-honour.

Another traditional dance that is performed today is a storytelling dance in Bali known as the Barong dance. The story is about the battle between good and evil, with Barong being the king of good spirits and Rangda, an evil being. Barong, a lion-like creature, is represented by two dancers dressed in a decorated Barong costume. On the other hand, the evil Rangda is accompanied by several men holding sharp knives. According to ancient writing, Rangda used her supernatural powers to spread terror. Eventually, the dance ends with Barong winning against Rangda.

The Barong dance is said to bring peace and harmony to the villagers. It used to be performed privately during sacred events. However, as more tourists flock to Bali, it is now frequently performed in public.

Such cultural dances hold a special place in the hearts of communities around the world and should be preserved.

Section I: Comprehension [2] (10 marks)

Read the passage carefully and answer questions 41 to 47.

"Boom!" Another explosion. Alek hoped his family were safe. He wondered when he would see them again. Last year, Alek did not have enough to eat during the famine. But this war was worse.

A raspy old voice broke his thoughts. "The drought is coming. I've to find a place with water. You cannot come with me."

Alek asked meekly, "Why not?"

"It would be dangerous for you to travel with me. The soldiers will leave an old woman like me alone. But, they'll take you away to fight along with them." The old woman shook her head in sympathy and continued, "I pity you but I can't help you anymore. Wherever you go, just walk away from the fighting."

Disheartened, Alek sat down on a rock quietly until he saw people approaching. They were from the Dinka tribe, too! Alek held his breath as he scanned the faces. Could his family be among them? However, only the faces of strangers greeted him. He heaved a sigh of disappointment. Where were they?

The old woman asked their leader, "Where are you going?"

He replied with a smile, " We're going to the other side of the River Nile. Thank you for welcoming us." The old woman put her hand on Alek's shoulder. "He's alone, separated from his family. Will you take him with you?" Silence. Alek saw the people exchange uneasy glances. Sensing he would be left behind again, Alek hung his head.

"I feel so sorry for the boy. He must be so scared without his family," a woman carrying a baby commented, casting a glance at Alek. The leader nodded and said, "We'll take him with us." Alek's eyes brimmed with tears, grateful for all the kindness shown to him thus far.
