Have you ever looked up to the night sky and wondered what lies beyond our planet? Since the (16) dawn of human civilisation, space exploration has been a subject of fascination for many people. The (17) main reason for the exploration of space is to extend knowledge about Earth, the solar system and the universe beyond.

Scientists are constantly seeking out new planets that may have the potential to (18) host life just like Earth. Space exploration also (19) encourages innovation and technological progress. Beyond such practical reasons, perhaps the most compelling reason for exploring space is humanity's curiosity that (20) cannot be satisfied. As we continue to explore the universe around us, we will certainly uncover new mysteries unknown to mankind.

'Go Green' Week

Our Mother Earth is currently facing a lot of environmental concerns. Problems like global warming and pollution affect every human, animal and country on our planet.

The biggest public education event, the 'Go Green' Week is a biennial event that features the participation of more than 30 organisations who are dedicated to create awareness and educate the public to conserve our environment.

Event Details:

Norris Convention Centre
Halls 1-3

24 – 30 November 2023
10.00 a.m. – 7.30 p.m.

FREE ADMISSION FOR ALL!

Save The Environment,
Save Our Future!

HALL 1 Our Earth Being Threatened	HALL 2 Renewing Our Renewable Energy	HALL 3 The 3Rs to Save Our Earth
What is global warming? How serious is pollution? Learn about different environmental problems from our student representatives from the different polytechnics.	Can we get electricity from wind, rivers, sunlight and underground heat? Get the answers from 'Solar Source', 'Starwind', 'Green Green' and other major participating organisations.	How can we REDUCE, REUSE and RECYCLE to cut down household waste? Find out more at the Singapore Environment Society interactive booths. Take part in quizzes and win attractive prizes.

Be spotted dressed in earthy colours and stand a chance to be featured in the next issue of Singapore Environment Society's newsletter.

For more information about the event, please visit the Singapore Environment Society (SES) website (www.ses.org).

Refer to the passage below when you answer questions 71 to 80 in Booklet B.

The moon was hanging low in the sky as Misha Marshall finished loading her pickup truck. Then she led Gandalf, her two-year-old Shiloh Shepherd dog, to his cage in the back. It was two in the morning.

Three days earlier, 12-year-old Michael Auberry had vanished from his Boy Scout troop's campsite in the Blue Ridge Mountains in North Carolina. A massive search had been launched whereby 566 trained rescuers were mobilised, but there was barely a trace of the boy.

For the past three days, rescuers had scanned the forest with infra-red scopes. Forest rangers had parked their biggest vehicle at the campsite, turned on the flashing lights and blasted Michael's name over a loudspeaker. High-angle rescue teams had abseiled down cliffs to see if Michael had fallen. Divers had looked in rivers and beneath every waterfall.

As Misha drove to the meeting point, she thought about how she and Gandalf had only trained for a year with the Search and Rescue Dog Association. She recalled what Dave, her husband, had said as she left the house that morning.

"Chances are slim. Don't get your hopes up," he said. Misha had glared at Dave for being negative. "Look, that Boy Scout has been out there for three days. Besides, it's Gandalf's first job. It is just not going to happen," he then defended himself.

When Misha arrived, the rescuers told her that the terrain was so rough that they had to go on their hands and knees at times. None of their dogs had found a trail of scent on the ground. Misha sighed. It would be a challenging task for even the keenest animal.

At 6 a.m., Misha and other searchers were briefed on every detail about Michael. Misha studied an image of Michael. She wanted to lock it in her mind, the way Gandalf would lock in his scent. Soon, the two of them set off to search. Misha did not want anything negative to cloud her focus. "Michael is alive," she told Gandalf. "We're going to find him."

She opened her bag and took out a shred of Michael's clothing which had been given to her by one of the rescue personnel earlier. She let Gandalf sniff it carefully. Head up and nose high, the dog started up the trail. Misha followed.

All of a sudden, Misha saw Gandalf's head snap up, but she could not spot a thing in the early morning light. Gandalf ran about 30 metres ahead. Misha saw him quickly lift his head again. Was that the sign she had been waiting for?

Downloaded from SingaKids.com

Gandalf trotted to the left, out of sight behind a cliff face, and Misha scrambled up the trail behind him. She turned the bend, and there, 50 metres up on a ledge, was a boy in a red jacket, who was dazed from hunger and fatigue.

Misha began yelling, "Michael, is that you? Michael?"

The boy turned silently toward them, nodding slowly. Misha clambered up the steep ridge to get to him. She helped him down and sat him next to Gandalf. "Are you okay with dogs?" Misha asked. He nodded. "Well, this is Gandalf," she said as the dog nuzzled the boy.

While Misha contacted the base camp with her walkie-talkie, Michael ate a few peanut butter crackers she had given him. He set the rest of them down, and Gandalf gobbled them up.

Back at the base camp, Misha called her husband right away. "You'll never believe what that little guy did!" she exclaimed. "He found the Boy Scout."

"Yeah, right," Dave said, chuckling. Misha stayed silent and realisation dawned on him. "Well, I guess I'll have to eat my words. He proved me wrong after all!"
