Section G: Comprehension (Short Response)

Read the passage carefully and answer questions 35 to 41. (8 marks)

It was a warm morning. Ama and her family were driving across the Howard Bridge over the Tampa River. They were ecstatic to travel as a family. The family had moved from Russia to Germany and finally to Florida five years ago. That day, they were on their way to have lunch with their relatives. Ama's two brothers, Rama and Emra, were in the backseat of the car with her.

The siblings were playing games and singing songs. As they approached the end of the bridge, there was a deafening sound. The back left tyre had blown out. The car started to spin across the road. Ama's father tried his best to control the car. Ama and her brothers were petrified. They held on tightly to one another. Ama's mother tried to calm the children. Fortunately, the road was quiet, with only a few cars around.

After a few minutes, the car finally came to a halt. Ama's mother quickly used her mobile phone to call for help. She checked on Ama and her brothers, making sure that the children were not hurt. She was relieved that her family had only suffered some bruises and cuts.

Soon, the police and the ambulance arrived with a tow truck. The police told Ama's family that they were very fortunate that traffic was light that day and that they had only suffered some bruises and cuts. The police gave the family a ride to their relatives' home.

A cobbler and a banker were neighbours. The cobbler was always singing as he worked. Whatever he earned from making and repairing shoes was just enough for food and simple clothing for his family, yet he was always cheerful.

Unlike the cobbler, the banker was almost always frowning. He hardly laughed and seemed to be unhappy all the time. The banker never sang.

One day, while the banker was taking an afternoon nap, he was rudely awakened by the cobbler's ear-piercing singing. Irritated by the singing, he decided to put a stop to it. He thought hard and devised a plan.

The banker went over to the cobbler's house where he was greeted cheerfully by the cobbler. He offered to pay the cobbler well if he looked after a bag of gold coins for him. The cobbler agreed to his offer as he wanted to be able to give his family a better life.

The cobbler thought that it was an easy job. He dug a hole and buried the bag of gold. However, now he had something to worry about. He was worried that robbers might take it away. He was so worried that he stopped singing. He was unable to sleep well. Seeing him worry made his family unhappy.

Suddenly, the cobbler realised that the bag of gold coins had destroyed his happiness. He quickly returned the bag of gold coins to the banker. Soon after, he was singing happily again.

"Get ready for bed quickly!" Mother called out to John. She was still washing the dishes after their dinner. John looked at himself in the wall mirror and repeated his mother's words while shaking a finger at his reflection. It made him laugh.

Ignoring his mother's instruction, he picked up a tube of toothpaste. He only meant to squeeze a tiny amount onto his toothbrush but cheekiness gave him courage. Instead, he squeezed hard and a minty snake appeared on his toothbrush. "Eew!" John cried out in disgust.

He had squeezed the tube really hard and the toothpaste looked like a white snake slithering up the toothbrush handle. He shook his toothbrush and the toothpaste flew off the toothbrush and into the sink. John squeezed the tube again to spell his name out across the sink.

"John!" Mother yelled. "Are you in bed yet?" John came to his senses and looked at the empty tube of toothpaste. The sink was covered with toothpaste. Hurriedly, John began scooping up the toothpaste and wanted to push it back into the tube but to no avail.
