A bright, red plastic chair sat in the hallway outside the principal's office. This chair was known as the Hot Seat. A student could end up in the Hot Seat for many different reasons. Most of them were for offences such as talking back to a teacher, bullying or being late for school.

It was 9.15 am on a Monday morning. Robin Yew was sitting on it. During his years at Kindsville Primary School, Robin had sat in the Hot Seat many times.

However, Robin was a special case. He had been caught doing something that teachers usually liked – reading. It was not about what he was reading but when and where he was reading.

Suddenly, something caught his attention. Without looking up from his book, Robin knew that voice.

"Hey, can you guys smell something?" It belonged to Dan, the bully, a boy who used to be a friend. Robin fixed his gaze on the page.

"Yucks! Can you smell that?" sneered Dan. "That's Robin Yew on the Hot Seat smelling like a fried bookworm! Ha-ha!"

Robin looked up from his book and scowled. He was about to toss out some insults when Dan and his gang stopped laughing abruptly and scurried off quietly. The door on his left moved and Robin turned. It was Mrs Sanjay.

"You may come into my room now, Robin."
