Some might find it a surprise that there are some people in Singapore who are unable to read or write in English. Singapore is recognised (16) as the most English-literate country in Asia, but there are still about 283,000 Singapore residents, aged 15 to 64, who struggle (17) with reading and writing basic English.

Within this group, there are considerable differences in their English competency (18). While there are some who are able to read elementary (19) primary-school-level texts, there are others who have trouble reading even simple road signs. These individuals typically (20) find jobs in the service industry where reading or writing is not that important. Fortunately, they are still able to find gainful employment.

Please note that the passage for Comprehension questions 71 to 80 in Booklet B is on the next page. You may now go on to Booklet B.

Downloaded from SingaKids.com

Refer to the passage below when you answer questions 71 to 80 in Booklet B.

In the small town of Crestwood, where dreams were as scarce as rain in a desert, lived Jake, a determined young boy with a passion for basketball. Jake dreamt of being a professional basketballer. Despite studying and working part-time at Mrs Thompson's restaurant to help his family make ends meet, Jake could often be found practising at the basketball court till the wee hours in the morning. Jake's unwavering commitment did not go unrewarded; Jake swiftly became a local icon, admired by neighbourhood kids for his skills on the court.

Soon, Coach Anderson heard about Jake's talent. He saw the potential in Jake and approached him with an offer to join a prestigious basketball academy in a distant city. Receiving the offer, Jake excitedly ran home to share the good news with his parents.

"I am sorry, dear. It is too far and we will be worried about you. More importantly, your father had just lost his job. We simply cannot afford to send you there. The school fees alone is more than our salary combined..." Mother's voice trailed off as Jake saw his dream slipping away. Tears welled up in his eyes as he tried to hide his disappointment as he knew his mother's words were true. They could not afford it. Wiping away his tears, he continued helping Mother clean the dishes.

One warm evening, Jake sat at his usual corner table, lost in thought, after completing his work at Mrs Thompson's restaurant. Noticing a change in Jake, Mrs Thompson approached with a warm smile. "Jake, you've been quiet tonight. Something on your mind?" she asked, wiping her hands on her apron. Jake looked up and answered, "It's just... Coach Anderson offered me a chance to go to a basketball academy but we can't afford it." "Well, do not worry. We will figure something out," assured Mrs Thompson, still smiling.

News of Jake's predicament spread through Crestwood like wildfire, reaching the ears of the compassionate townsfolk. They rallied together, organising fundraisers, bake sales, and community events to raise money for Jake's journey, recognising the potential of their humble neighbour and the pride he could bring to their town. The overwhelming support was beyond what Jake could have imagined. He could not thank the people enough but vowed to repay their faith in him. Soon, the funds needed for his journey were raised.

With tearful goodbyes and a heart full of hope, Jake left Crestwood for the bustling Cedarville City, where his talent would be moulded. At the academy, he faced challenges, intense training sessions, and fierce competition. At times, these made him so tired that he wanted to give up, but he remembered the love and support from his small town and that fuelled his determination to keep training.

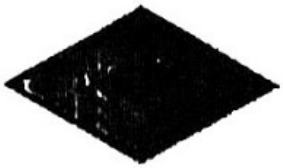

Months passed, and the day of Jake's first national championship arrived. Jake's team, the Cedarville Cyclones, faced formidable opponents, but Jake's skills had blossomed under the guidance of Coach Anderson. In the final minute of the game, with Cedarville trailing by a mere point, Jake stole the ball from the opponent's star player. Racing down the court, the clock ticking away, he made a breathtaking slam dunk that sent the gymnasium into a frenzy. Cedarville took the lead and emerged victorious. Jake's name echoed throughout the arena.

The small town of Crestwood erupted in joy as they watched their hometown hero on national television holding the championship trophy high. Jake had not only fulfilled his dreams but had made Crestwood proud. As Jake stood on the podium, tears of joy filled his eyes. "This is possible thanks to all the folks back at Crestwood," acknowledged Jake at an interview, dedicating the victory to those who had believed in him.

Jake went on to win multiple championships and become a famous professional basketball player. Jake's story became an inspiration for people of Crestwood. Jake realised not many would be as fortunate as he, so he also set up a free sports academy back in his hometown, providing local aspiring athletes an even more accessible opportunity to follow in his footsteps as a way of paying it forward. The pride of Crestwood spurred on many to start having dreams of their own. The small town where dreams were as scarce as rain in a desert was a thing of the past.
