Downloaded from SingaKids.com

Refer to the passage below when you answer questions 71 to 80 in Booklet B.

Large, heavy raindrops began falling from the sky. Alex looked up in dismay. Trust it to rain on the very day of his trial for the national basketball team. Alex's hopes of arriving dry and composed at the court were dashed by the change in weather. Clutching his sports bag tightly, he rushed towards the bus stop. The umbrella he had in hand barely shielded him from the rain and the bus was nowhere in sight.

Alex's father, the sole breadwinner, was suffering from chronic pain. It had left him without a job for months. The family was going through a difficult time. As the eldest son, Alex was determined to put an end to their financial struggles. If he made it through to the team, it would turn the tables for his family. He would have a stable source of income while living his biggest dream of being a professional basketball player.

Alex finally alighted a walking distance away from the indoor basketball court. His heart pounded as he hurried down the bustling street. The trial of a lifetime awaited Alex, but life had other plans in store for him. An elderly woman, frail and confused, stood precariously on the kerb of a busy junction. Cars honked and swerved around her, and panic flickered in her eyes. Alex shuddered to think what could happen to her if she was left alone. With a reassuring smile, Alex approached her. The woman's eyes, clouded with anxiety, met Alex's. "I-I can't find the bus stop," she stammered. Alex knew every precious minute counted, yet he could not ignore her plea. "Don't worry. Let me help you," Alex soothed. He took the woman's arm in his and guided her across the chaotic junction. The pair weaved slowly through a sea of impatient commuters to the bus stop. Time ticked away. Eventually, the elderly woman boarded her bus and found a seat, mouthing words of thanks to Alex as the bus pulled away. Although the trial awaited, Alex was glad to have chosen to answer a more urgent call for kindness.

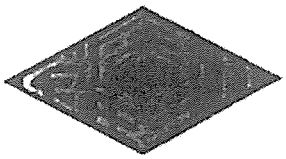

Alex resumed his journey to the basketball court. Just then, a car hurtled past a puddle, sending a torrent of dirty water splashing across his pair of shoes. He gasped, his heart sinking as the grimy liquid soaked through his shoes and socks. For a moment, he felt a wave of despair wash over him due to this unexpected situation. However, he could not afford to wallow in self-pity. With no time to lose, he quickened his pace towards his destination. He reminded himself about the value of resilience—and that no splash of water could dampen his spirit.

Fifteen minutes after his scheduled time for the trial, Alex made it to the court. His heart sank even further at the sight of the other participants, who were putting on their best game. They were also visibly more presentable in their pristine jerseys and basketball shoes. Alex stood out like a sore thumb. Much as he knew that the chances were slim, he braced himself for the impossible. He would not give up just yet. He summoned his courage and approached the trial officials for a chance at the tryout despite missing his slot. With trembling hands, Alex explained his situation, apologising profusely for his tardiness. Instead of turning him away, the officials listened with empathy. Their expressions softened as they heard his story. In a remarkable display of compassion, they acceded to his plea. Seizing the golden opportunity, Alex warmed up and took to the court, pushing the fact that his shoes were all squishy out of his mind. His full concentration was on the game and how badly he wanted to prove himself worthy of the national team.

The first few tests were a series of drills. Alex cleared those with ease, having trained rigorously over countless hours of practices through the years. The match that was to take place was the true test for the participants. Besides attacking and defensive skills, being an effective team player was the key trait that officials were looking out for in players. To that effect, Alex communicated well with those who were on his team and created opportunities for his team to score. Seeing his energetic and spectacular play, the officials observing by the sidelines knew without a doubt that it was the result of countless hours of blood, sweat and tears put in.

When Alex walked out of the basketball court later that afternoon, he could not help but wonder about how different things would have turned out had it not rained earlier that day. Despite that, he still concluded that he would not have done things any differently if he was caught in the same situation again. Just as he was about to cross the junction to the bus stop, his mobile phone rang. He received news that he had made it. As the saying goes, "Hard work always pays off." Alex was delighted that his hard work had finally paid off.
