"Mother, may I ride my bicycle now?" Siti asked cheerfully.

Siti's mother replied, "Sure! You can get to know this neighbourhood better and maybe even make some new friends!"

Siti nodded. Her family had just moved into her new home and Siti missed her friends from her old neighbourhood. They used to go skating and jogging together.

As Siti was cycling around her block of flats, she spotted a stone on the ground. She swerved to avoid it which caused her to lose control of her bicycle. Crash! Siti's bicycle hit a lamppost and she fell onto the ground.

Blood oozed out of Siti's elbow and she lay dazed on the ground. Then, she heard someone calling, "Are you alright?" Surprised, Siti looked up and saw a girl running towards her.

"My name is Amy," she said. She helped Siti up and picked up the bicycle. She offered, "I can help you roll your bicycle home." Siti's elbow hurt badly so she agreed.

Back home, Siti explained to her mother what had happened. Siti's mother thanked Amy and bandaged Siti's elbow. Then, the new friends spent some time playing together. Before Amy went home, the girls agreed to meet up again.

Read the passage below and answer questions 43 to 48.

At Hope Primary School, Brandon was known as the toughest boy. Many students avoided him as he would always knock into others and mock them. He always teased Arman, a quiet, bespectacled boy who loved books and rarely spoke.

One day, after Brandon broke Arman's glasses accidentally, he refused to apologise. Their teacher, Miss Lee, asked to speak with him privately. Brandon expected to be shouted at. However, Miss Lee shared her own story.

"When I was your age," she said, "I wore thick glasses and was shy, just like Arman. I was teased daily. It made me feel sad." She paused. "But one day, someone stood up for me. He didn't have to, but he did. That moment helped me believe I was worth something."

Brandon was stunned. He had never thought of Miss Lee as someone who had ever been unhappy in school. Her words stayed with him.

A few days later, Brandon approached Arman and handed him a new pair of glasses. "I'm sorry," he muttered. Arman looked surprised but smiled and said, "Thanks."

From then on, Brandon changed. He stopped being mean and even joined the school's Kindness Club to help others. Teachers noticed the change, and students started seeing Brandon in a new light and some even went to him for advice when they faced problems.

Brandon had turned over a new leaf — and he knew it was for the better.
