Section G: Comprehension 1 (8 marks)
Read the passage carefully and answer the questions 35 to 41.

What is a White Rhinoceros?

The white rhinoceros is one of the largest land mammals, second to the elephant. It can grow up to four metres long and weigh more than 2,000 kilograms. The white rhinoceros is not actually white, even though its name says so. Its name comes from a Dutch word, wijde, meaning "wide", which refers to its wide, square-shaped mouth. This special mouth shape helps it graze on grass, which is its main source of food. The white rhinoceros has two horns, mainly used to defend itself and its calves, and sometimes to dig for water.

Habitat and Behaviour

The white rhinoceros lives in the open grasslands and savannahs of Africa. It has poor eyesight but excellent hearing and a strong sense of smell, which help it notice danger and escape from predators. During the warmest parts of the day, the white rhinoceros moves to shady spots or rolls in mud. These behaviours protect its thick skin from insect bites and sunburn.

Threats and Protection

People illegally hunt white rhinoceroses for their horns, which some people believe can cure illnesses. Also, it is tough for the white rhinoceroses to survive when their homes are being destroyed. Many wildlife parks now protect the white rhinoceroses and stop people from hunting them. If we continue to care for them, we can still save these gentle giants.

When Riya was five, something scary happened to her. She was playing in the shallow end of the swimming pool when she slipped and went underwater. It only lasted a few seconds, but to Riya, it felt like an eternity. Fortunately, a lifeguard saw her and pulled her out at once. Ever since that day, swimming had made her heart pound with fear.

From then on, Riya avoided swimming. Even the smell of chlorine or the sound of water splashing made her stomach feel uneasy. She wished she could swim like her friends, but the memory of her near-drowning experience always came rushing back.

To help her, Riya's parents signed her up for SwimSafer lessons. On the first day, Riya did not want to go near the pool. Her swimming coach, Mr Tan, had a calm voice and a kind smile. "Let us go step by step," he said. "If you feel scared, take a deep breath and remember what we have practised."

Over several weeks, Riya practised gently kicking her legs, blowing bubbles, and floating on her back. Slowly, the pool started to feel less scary. Then came the big test. Mr Tan asked her to swim across the pool. Riya pushed off, but halfway through, she froze in fear. Her arms stopped moving.

Then she remembered, "Take a deep breath. I can do it." She calmed herself down and moved slowly. Taking one stroke at a time, she finally reached the other side.

"I did it!" she cheered, beaming with pride. Riya learned that fear is not easy to overcome, but when you face it, you become braver and hopefully be able to overcome it one day.
