Section G: Comprehension (Selected Response)

Read the passage and answer the questions 33 to 39 [8 marks]

Liam and I were exploring the bustling school carnival. Brightly-coloured stalls lined the school field, selling delicious treats and offering fun games. We had just bought candy floss when a terrified shriek cut through the cheerful noise.

"What's happening?" cried Liam, dropping the candy floss in surprise.

"Look!" I exclaimed, pointing a shaky finger. "Over by the ring-toss game stall!"

A brown snake slithered swiftly across the dusty ground cautiously near the game stall. Panic erupted instantly among the children. They dropped their belongings as they scrambled backwards. Parents quickly pulled their little ones away from the unexpected visitor.

"Stay back, everyone!" boomed a calm. deep voice Mr Evans, our brave science teacher, pushed confidently through the frightened crowd. He held a long, sturdy stick and a large canvas bag.

"Easy now," he murmured, gently guiding the startled reptile with the stick. With surprisingly quick movements, Mr Evans guided the terrifying snake into the waiting sack.

"It's just a harmless rat snake," he explained calmly to the onlookers. "It probably wandered in from the jungle surrounding the school grounds looking for some rodents for a meal." Upon hearing that, everyone frowned.

Liam and I looked at each other, our hearts still thumping wildly.

"Well," I said shakily, "that was our most exciting carnival ever!"

Liam nodded. "Definitely a day we wont forget!"

Section H: Comprehension (Open-Ended)
Read this passage carefully and answer questions 40 to 45. [10 marks]

Eric was at the train platform, grumbling to himself. He could not board the earlier train as it was too crowded. He sighed repeatedly and was getting restless when a train finally stopped in front of him. The train carriage filled up quickly as many office workers were rushing to go home after work. As the train picked up speed, the passengers were jostled swaying to and fro with the movement of the train. A lady in a bright orange dress caught his attention. He looked on and chuckled at her mismatched shoes, one in plain white and the other in shocking pink

Nearing the next station, the lady slowly released her grip of the grab pole and inched her way through the crowd. Only then did Eric see that the lady was holding a white cane and tapping it slowly from side to side. As the train doors opened, the alighting passengers, who were used to the daily battle, had to push their way through the crowd to get out of the train.

"Hey! Move aside for people to get out first!" Eric hollered as he moved swiftly to help the lady who was trying anxiously to get out. Her eyes were fixed straight ahead and unblinking as she carefully tapped her way through the crowd. Several passengers glared at him while others muttered crossly at his rude behaviour. Eric did not plan to alight but was overwhelmed by a sudden protective feeling towards the lady. He took her by her arm and helped her onto the platform safely.

"Thank you! It is always a challenge when people are in a rush," the lady smiled before disappearing into the sea of people. Eric felt his cheeks burn. He saw how challenging it was for someone with a disability to move around on public transport as he hopped onto the next train.
