Anne was a young girl who lived in Green Gables, a small farmhouse. One afternoon, she was excited to host her first tea party. Besides, it had been a long time since she last talked to Diana, and she longed to spend some time with her.

Anne had spent the morning preparing the table with cookies and a special drink she found in the pantry. She was over the moon because Diana's mother had agreed to let her come to Green Gables the day before.

When Diana arrived, Anne poured the special drink into their glasses. "This is raspberry cordial," she said. The girls sipped the drink. After a few minutes, Diana's cheeks turned red, and she began to feel dizzy. Anne looked closely at the bottle she had taken from the pantry and gasped, "Oh no! It isn't raspberry cordial—it's a bottle of wine. I'm so sorry!"

Diana's mother, Mrs. Barry, found out what had happened. She was furious. She reprimanded Anne for being careless and forbade Diana from visiting her again. Anne was heartbroken. Recognising that the incident had occurred because she was careless, Anne vowed that she would be more attentive to the food and drink she served her guests in the future. "Maybe then, Mrs Barry would allow Diana to visit me again," Anne assured herself.
