Text 2

The extract below is taken from a school project write-up about air-conditioners.

Nowadays, everyone is buying eco-friendly air-conditioners. However, their impact on reducing carbon footprint may be limited. Companies often highlight their efficiency without evidence of long-term energy savings, misleading consumers into believing that they are making a difference by purchasing those products.

To make informed choices, consumers must look beyond advertising campaigns that label air-conditioners as eco-friendly. Official energy ratings, certifications and independent reviews are more reliable sources of information. They help consumers consider how much energy the products genuinely save, how long they will last, and how much maintenance they will require. It makes more sense to purchase air-conditioners that are durable and easy to maintain. The less often we repair or discard faulty machines, the more eco-friendly we are.

21. According to the advertisement in Text 1, which of the following is true of BreezyCon air-conditioners?

(1) They barely use electricity.
(2) They can be purchased online.
(3) They do not affect the environment.
(4) They have served some customers well.

22. "A better future starts with smarter choices." The writer included this statement in Text 1 _____.

(1) to give people a glimpse of BreezyCon's benefits
(2) to tell people that they have control over the future
(3) to convince people that they should choose BreezyCon
(4) to get people to think about the choices they have made

23. According to Text 2, when shopping for an air-conditioner, consumers should _____.

(1) visit different shops to compare prices for different models and brands
(2) look for the most eco-friendly models by asking companies for evidence of their efficiency
(3) select air-conditioners which are advertised to be eco-friendly and have the best advertising campaigns
(4) refer to official certifications and energy ratings issued by the authorities and reviews given by users

24. According to Text 2, which of the following statements is not true?

(1) Eco-friendly air-conditioners are very popular among consumers.
(2) Buying eco-friendly air-conditioners reduces our carbon footprint significantly.
(3) Shoppers should consider the maintenance costs before buying air-conditioners.
(4) Advertisements do not consider whether the air-conditioners save energy in the long run.

25. We cannot trust the way Text 1 promotes BreezyCon air-conditioners because Text 2 says _____.

(1) the impact on carbon footprint is always limited
(2) such companies only highlight the efficiency of their products
(3) it makes more sense to purchase air-conditioners that are durable and easy to maintain
(4) consumers must study carefully advertising campaigns that label air-conditioners as eco-friendly

Please note that the passage for Comprehension questions 66 to 75 in Booklet B is on the next page. You may now go on to Booklet B.

Downloaded from SingaKids.com

Refer to the passage below when you answer questions 66 to 75 in Booklet B.

It was a chaotic start to the morning in the innovation corner of Bahagia Primary School. The newly formed Space Explorers Club sat in tense silence. The members avoided each other's eyes. Frustration lingered in the air. An unresolved disagreement had cast a shadow over the event that was happening soon.

The club had started with a big buzz. The members spent several weeks researching facts about space travel. They took a few months to build their toy rocket. Despite this arduous process, the team worked tirelessly. However, when it was time to plan the presentation, the team found themselves divided. Calvin and Siti wanted a structured, factual delivery that explained how a rocket flew. Arjun and Mia, however, felt the presentation needed a creative twist. They suggested performing a short skit that showed astronauts preparing for a launch, complete with sound effects and dialogue. "I think it might be more exciting if we presented a short skit. Maybe people would remember it better," Arjun suggested.

Calvin disagreed, "This isn't a school play! We're here to present science, not act!" As the days passed, both sides grew more frustrated. Group discussions became heated arguments. No one wanted to back down. Even Arjun, who had first supported the skit, now felt torn. "I think the group's arguments have grown so intense. I better not add on or our group might just break up," Arjun thought. The group continued to meet without much progress.

By the morning of the Science Fair, the group had not rehearsed once as a team. Their model was ready. Their research was solid, but their presentation was in disarray. Mr Tan, their mentor, entered the room and sensed the tension. "Alright, what's going on?" he asked gently. Voices erupted all at once. Everyone was full of frustration. Calvin crossed his arms and shook his head, "We can't do the skit. It's too childish."

Siti let out an audible sigh and lowered her gaze to the floor. Her shoulders slumped as the conversation grew louder around her. Arjun's face turned red. "And your idea is too boring! No one's going to pay attention," he snapped. The room grew louder until Mr Tan raised his hand, his calm presence immediately quieting the group.

A heavy silence settled over the room. After a moment, Mia broke the silence, "What if we begin with the explanation, just like Calvin suggested, and finish with the skit? That way, we get the best of both worlds while achieving our group goal."

Calvin looked uncertain but eventually agreed, "Alright, if the facts remain the main focus." The team spent the next two hours working in full force. Siti and Calvin wrote a short script. Arjun managed the lighting. Mia added sound effects using a mobile application. That afternoon, the classroom was filled with visitors. The team began with a confident explanation of their model. Then, to everyone's surprise, the lights dimmed, and the skit began. Laughter rippled through the crowd as the "astronauts" performed their routine while teaching the physics of lift-off. The principal commented, "You've balanced information and creativity brilliantly. I am sure the visitors would go away remembering the facts clearly."

At the next meeting, the mood was cheerful. The team laughed over behind-the-scenes moments and celebrated their success. "I guess combining our ideas really was the best solution," Calvin admitted, glancing at Arjun. Mia added, "I'm glad we listened, adapted and brought out the best in one another."

Mr Tan smiled and said, "That, Mia, is the power of synergy—the natural solution to conflicts." To this day, a picture of the team hangs ~~wal~~ the innovation corner—a reminder that conflicts, when handled well, could lead to something greater than anyone would have imagined.
