Text 2
The extract below is taken from an article about chocolate.

Not all children enjoy chocolate, and the reasons can be varied. While many find chocolate irresistible, some may find its rich taste too intense or its sweetness overwhelming.

Dietary restrictions, such as lactose intolerance, which means the body cannot digest milk, or nut allergies, can also make chocolate less appealing.

Additionally, individual taste preferences and cultural influences play significant roles. Children from cultures where chocolate is not commonly eaten might not develop a craving for it.

Hence, do not be surprised if some children prefer other treats to chocolate. After all, it is a matter of personal preference.

(3) to persuade people to come and watch the performance
(4) to match the picture of children gazing at the chocolate fondue

23. "Step into a magical chocolate factory, where a group of curious children embarks on an extraordinary adventure." The picture supports this by showing the children as _____.

Refer to the passage below when you answer questions 66 to 75 in Booklet B.

Twelve-year-old Maya pressed her forehead against the glass window, watching the rain blur the garden into soft green smudges. Her school holidays at Grandmother's house was dull—filled with old books and dusty furniture—until she noticed the locked gate behind the overgrown hedges.

"Maya, you've been staring outside for an hour," Grandmother said.

"Grandma," Maya began hesitantly, "what's behind the iron gate in the garden?" Her grandmother paused and then said, "That gate has been closed for a long time for a reason. No one is allowed to enter." Maya nodded, but her frown showed that she was unsatisfied with the answer. She wanted to find out more about the locked gate.

That afternoon, Maya pushed through the hedges and stopped at the gate. The rusty lock clung stubbornly to the bars, but she struck it with a rock until it snapped. Her hands were sweaty and her heart thumped as the gate creaked open. She slipped inside, glancing around nervously. As she explored, something shiny glinted beneath a tangle of roots. Dropping to her knees, she dug until she pulled out a small wooden box. Inside was a velvet pouch with a necklace that had a bright green stone. Maya's eyes widened and she stared at it, hardly blinking. As she walked back to the house, she kept thinking about her discovery. That night, Maya slipped it under her shirt. Wearing it made her feel bold as though she could do anything.

The next morning, Grandmother observed her closely. "You look like you've seen sunshine in your dreams," she remarked. Maya smiled, but guilt tugged at her heart as she had not been truthful. When school reopened, Maya wore the necklace every day. Her best friend, Layla, noticed it. "Cool pendant," she said. "Where did you get it?"

"Oh... it's just something I found," Maya mumbled.

Soon, strange things began happening. Answers in class came to her easily—almost as if they were whispered into her ears. During a Maths quiz, she solved a problem she had never understood before. "I guess I'm getting smarter like Layla," she told herself. However, when her friend, Layla, was accused of cheating simply because their answers matched, Maya knew something was terribly wrong.

Downloaded from SingaKids.com

That night, unable to sleep, Maya tiptoed downstairs clutching the necklace. "Grandma," Maya whispered, tears in her eyes. "I found something in the garden, and I think it's causing trouble." Grandmother looked at the necklace and nodded gently. "What you found was once mine—a gift from long ago. It is beautiful but it carries power. That is why I had to hide it."

"I didn't mean to cheat," Maya admitted. "But once it started helping me, I couldn't stop. Yesterday, Layla got into trouble because of me." Grandmother nodded. "So, what are you going to do about it now?"

The next morning, Maya went back to the garden and put the necklace where it belonged. Afterwards, she confessed everything to Layla. It was one of the hardest things she had ever done. Layla smiled gratefully and said, "Thanks for telling me. That was brave." Later that week, Maya received her spelling test results. She did not get full marks, but it felt like a weight off her shoulders. She realised that with effort, anything is possible.
