Text 2

The extract below is taken from an article about chocolate.

Chocolate is well loved by many children for its rich taste and sweetness. From chocolate bars to cakes and cookies, it brings happiness to countless young fans. Consuming dark chocolate in moderation can bring many health advantages.

Some children have health conditions, such as nut allergies or lactose intolerance. These prevent them from enjoying chocolate. Additionally, individual taste preferences and diverse food cultures play significant roles in shaping people's choices. These factors influence both what people enjoy eating and how they perceive and appreciate different cuisine. Children from places where chocolate is uncommon might not develop a liking for it. Hence, do not be surprised when you hear of children preferring other treats to chocolate.

The rain poured relentlessly. Elina made her way home from school, treading cautiously on the dreary and muddy path. Taking a shortcut through the park, her umbrella barely shielded her from the downpour. As she hurried past the pavilion, a faint sound stopped her in her tracks. Curious, she peeked behind a solitary, weathered bench. There, huddled and trembling, was a soaked kitten, its fur matted with rain. Eyes, wide with fear, it stared up at her as it pressed itself into a corner. Elina's heart ached. "Hello, I know exactly how it feels to be alone and vulnerable," she said to her new friend. Without a second thought for the cold seeping into her bones, Elina rummaged through her backpack, pulling out a packet of milk she had saved for recess. Carefully, she poured a little into her palm, but the kitten was too scared to drink. "It's alright," Elina whispered, gently wrapping the shivering creature in her jacket. By the time she picked it up to cradle in her arms, the kitten had pressed its small face against her, still quivering, but now with a hint of trust.

At home, her parents looked worried to see their girl drenched. Clutching the bundled kitten, Elina hesitated at the doorway, her mind clouded with doubt. Would they be angry and refuse to let the kitten stay? She had asked her parents for a pet on a few occasions but was always turned down. "Taking care of a pet is a great responsibility. Plus, you're always busy with schoolwork," they would say. Sometimes, Elina wished she had a sibling to share her secrets and worries with. The house always seemed silent. Expecting a scolding, she explained what had happened. Smiling, her mother gently peeled off the sodden jacket and carried the kitten. Elina blinked in surprise, unused to such a gentle response from her mother "We can keep it here for a few days," her father said, appearing with a clean towel for her. "The owner must be worried sick," he added. Elina wanted to rebut but knew better than to do so.

Snowy. That was what Elina named it. Every morning, she fed it and cleaned its bedding before going to school. After completing her homework and revision, Elina would play with Snowy. Such was the routine for the next couple of days. Having grown up with only the quiet companionship of her parents, Elina felt a new kind of joy. One evening, while helping her mother put up 'Lost and Found' notices about Snowy, something caught her eye. "Missing kitten – white with a small brown patch on its tail. Answers to the name Luna." A contact number was listed below. Her heart sank.

"If I keep her, I'll never feel lonely again... but what if her family is missing her right now?" Elina deliberated intensely as she stroked the kitten's soft fur. "It doesn't seem fair to keep her just because I want a friend," she reasoned silently. After thinking long and hard, she picked up the phone. A kind-sounding lady answered. When Elina mentioned the kitten, the woman's voice cracked with emotion. "Oh, thank you! My son has been crying for days."

The next day, Elina stood outside the woman's house, Snowy cradled gently in her arms. A little boy and a woman stepped out of the doorway. The moment he saw the kitten, he exclaimed in glee, "Luna!" His mouth fell open slightly and his eyes grew wide, as if he could hardly believe what he was seeing. The kitten meowed and leapt from Elina's arms into the boy's. He gave it a tight hug, burying his face in its fur. Watching their joyful reunion, Elina's chest tightened. "I'm going to miss you," she whispered as she waved goodbye.

One day, Elina returned home from school to find her parents waiting for her. "We think you're ready for a little responsibility of your own," Mother said with a knowing smile, "so, your daddy is taking us to an animal shelter tomorrow morning." Elina's eyes sparkled. "Hooray! Thanks!" she squealed, her heart leaping with joy. This time, it felt like her dream had finally come true.
